

the Moderation and Honour of his Majesty's Government; from hence likewise will they procure to themselves the heartfelt Satisfaction of an unfeigned, national Praise for having delivered these Kingdoms from the infernal Designs of Paricides: Nor will the glorious Work of Reformation and Redress rest with them alone; the Parliament, justly indignant at the Perfidy with which their Confidence hath been abused, will resent the Practices that have been thus artfully played off upon them; and by totally disclaiming those violent and pernicious Councils, which their Authority hath been betrayed into the Protection of, will proclaim to the World this most excellent Truth, that the Power of the British Senate is to be equalled only by it's Wisdom and Justice, and an incessant Labour for the Ease and Prosperity of all his Majesty's Subjects.

I am, dear Sir, yours, &c. &c.
