CASE OF PREMATURE INTERMENT.—A case of premature interment is recorded in the Apology for the Life of Mrs. Bellamy, as follows:—"Upon our arrival in Dublin," proceeds Mrs. Bellamy, "my mother and myself were very kindly received by Dr. Walker. The doctor, at this time, was writing a treatise against the Irish custom of burying the dead within a few hours after their decease. When my mother heard on what subject he was writing, she related to him the story of Mrs. Godfrey; and as soon as she had concluded it, she promised that if she should be in the same kingdom with him when he died, she would attend to the corpse, and take care that it was not entombed whilst there was the least probability of return to life." The sequel of the story is, that, some time after, Dr. Walker fell ill of fever, and "one afternoon, sending to inquire after him, the servant returned and informed her that he had died during the night, and that they were going to bury him; she added, that as they were about to shroud the body, the orifices which had been made in the arms for letting off blood had bled afresh." For reasons which are stated neither Mrs. Bellamy nor her mother could go to the doctor's that night, and they therefore sent the servant in a coach, directing that if the body was interred, to have it taken up at all costs, for they had learned that Mrs. Walker had been persuaded by her sister to leave the house and retire with her to Dunleary. The servant, while on her way, either from apprehension or love of company, contrived to take several persons with her, and, on arriving at the doctor's, found the body had been interred immediately after she had left, lest the disorder of which he had died should be infectious. She also learned, that, Mrs. Walker being a Dissenter, the body had been interred in the Anabaptist burying-ground, at the other end of the town. She proceeded, therefore, in search of the sexton, still accompanied by her friends; but, as they could not find his house, they clambered over the gate, and got round the grave, where the servant alleged she heard a groan. About day-break, by means of some labourers who informed them where he lived, they found the sexton, who, after considerable hesitation, disinterred the body; and on opening the coffin—"I shudder while I relate the horrid scene," says the authoress—"they found the body now totally deprived of life, but observed that the doctor had endeavoured to burst it open, had turned upon his side, and the arms had bled afresh. The family, however, hearing of the circumstance, the body was ordered to be re-interred, and the affair was hushed up."—Biass on Sleep

Glory not in making others drunk; what joy canst thou take in that victory where the devil wears the garland, and the reward is hell.

Drive away and never endure talebearers; whoever entertains thee with the faults of others, designs to serve thee in the same kind.

Assist the afflicted with something real, if thou canst: as for tears, they are but water; what good can they do?

In the morning think what thou hast to do; and at night ask what thou hast done.

Keep thy eyes open before marriage; and half-shut afterwards.

Look upon thy life as a stream that continually runs, and never returns.
