Daily Hints For the Cook

FRUIT PUDDING.
One quart of blueberries or raspberries brought to a boil with one cup of sugar, or more if it suits; a little water; line a bowl with stale bread, then pour in berries, then cover with pieces of bread, set a plate over it and let it get cold. Serve with custard sauce; rhubarb may be used.

PINEAPPLE SHERBERT.
Juice of two lemons, one pineapple, three cups sugar, two quarts milk, mix lemons and sugar, then add pineapple, then the milk, a little at a time, stirring constantly all the time; have milk very cold to prevent curdling; then freeze from ten to fifteen minutes and remove dasher and pack.

LEMON PUDDING.
One quart milk, two cups bread crumbs; let come to a boil, set aside to cool, then add the yolks of two eggs beaten light, one cup sugar, a little salt and the grated rind of one lemon; bake in moderate oven forty-five minutes.

Sauce—The beaten whites of the eggs, sugar and lemon juice to taste.

Which Was Successful?

By RUTH CAMERON

MOLLY, the little stenographer, was much stirred up. So was the last open fire of the season, before which we were sitting. "That woman had stirred up Molly, and Molly stirred up the fire, a perfectly good fire, too—the want-to-be-cryin' built it."

Molly had been job hunting, not for herself—Molly's employer is still in his right mind—but for another girl.

"You know, big sister," related Molly, "this girl had only had high school stenography, but she's the kind of a girl who will work her head off if you give her a chance, and she just had to have a position right off, and a friend of mine sent her to me, so, of course, I had to give her a chance. And then I remembered that Miss Ellis had only had high school stenography when she started, and had a terrible time getting a place, so I felt sure she'd understand."

"Well, big sister," Molly drew a long, sighing breath and looked at the looks of her, but I remembered what a time I had getting my first position, so of course I went to her. And what DO you think she said?"

Molly paused dramatically, but no one seemed inclined to hazard a guess.

"Well," continued Molly, "she said, 'I came to this city with no more training than your friend had and in just as tight a place, and no one helped me get my position.' Then, of course, I thought she was going to say how hard it was and how she'd like to make it easier for this girl, but she didn't. Instead she just sat there glaring at me, and finally she said again, 'I guess I had about as hard a time as any girl could have, and nobody ever helped me. And then I realized that she meant that as a reason why she wouldn't help the girl, instead of why she would, and I said, 'Oh!' and got up and came out. And WHAT do you think of that, big sister?"

"Did any one help you to get your position, Molly?" asked the lady-who-always-knows-something.

"Why, no," said Molly. "How could they? I didn't know any one. That's why I knew how it felt and wanted to help her."

"Said the man-who-thinks, 'Did I hear you call Miss Ellis successful?'"

"Oh yes," said Molly, "she's a terribly successful. Why, they say she gets at least thirty dollars a week."

"And still a failure," murmured the man-who-thinks half to himself.

"Why, what do you mean by that?" said Molly.

"He means," said the want-to-be-cryin', quite forgetting his proper role—and that was especially nice of him for Molly in the course of her "stirring" story had quite spoiled his perfectly good fire—"He means that we have the really successful stenographer right here with us."

And no one disputed his interpretation.

Lord Killanin and His Steamship Line From Galway—A Tournament That Failed

(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Co.)

Lord Killanin, who is making an effort to bring Ireland nearer to America and Canada, by making the port of Galway a shipping point that will rival Belfast, Glasgow and Liverpool, is the eldest son of the late Baron Killanin, who as "Mickey Morris" was for half a century the reputed author of every good joke that passed current in Ireland. The present Lord Killanin, although still only forty-five, has had considerable experience in politics and public affairs, as well as in literature.

He has the degree of Bachelor of Arts, Trinity College, Dublin, is a member of the Bar, Lincoln's Inn, and the gold medalist of the University Philosophical Society, was private secretary to his father when very important, that of the opinion of a county councillor for the Spital division of Galway, and before his accession to the peerage was elected member of parliament for Galway, on the Unionist ticket, winning his seat in competition with a Nationalist—a feat that the opinion of his constituent judges no other Conservative could have done.

So excellent a representative in parliament was he, that general regret was expressed when the death of his father brought about his accession to the barony and his transfer "upstairs" to the somewhat atmosphere of the House of Lords. Lord Killanin argues that there are many considerations of a patriotic and sentimental nature—imperial, national and local—favoring the development of a great port at Galway. He contends that the commercial aspects of the scheme are of primary importance, that by using Galway as a terminal port, a "through Ireland" route to the United States, Canada and Newfoundland can be established, that will greatly shorten the present route and avoid the dangers of the Irish Sea, which, crowded as it is, and often foggy, is the cause of risks, delays and difficulties. The harbor at Galway is wide, deep and free from obstructions. Lord Killanin pleads for the assistance of all patriotic Irishmen in this work of great national importance.

While wishing Lord Killanin the greatest measure of success in his laudable efforts in behalf of Ireland, and of a closer communication with America, the great republic that he admires so sincerely, we feel that I cannot refer to this subject without reminding my readers of the line of ships that ran between Galway and America in the first half of the nineteenth century. For a time the line was a success, but after the death of its founder, the thirteenth Earl of Eglinton, it became a failure, owing, it is said, to mismanagement. Whether another transatlantic line, with a home port at Galway, will have better luck in these days, is of course more than I can competently argue, as I do not know what merchandise, manufactures or products can be advantageously shipped at Galway in preference to other ports. Anyhow, there is plenty of room for the biggest ships in Galway harbor, and the hills around afford shelter against high winds.

The Tournament That Failed

The thirteenth Earl of Eglinton, who made such a brave effort on the part of the city of Galway, is the same earl who spent an enormous sum of money in the attempt to revive an interest in chivalry, by organizing and financing the famous Eglinton tournament, where knights in armor lited at each other and broke lances against shields, hence, the studies of a queen of beauty. This never-to-be-forgotten joust was enacted in the neighborhood of Eglinton Castle in Scotland. The early preparations were made, however, near London, in the then rustic suburb of St. John's Wood. The "dress rehearsal" which took place in a large field, afforded no end of fun and amusement to the on-lookers, for the "knights" had the greatest difficulty in mounting their horses, on account of the weight of their armor, and the way they impeded their motions. They had to be hoisted into their saddles, by a sort of derrick arrangement, Lord Eglinton himself being the only one who could vault on his horse unassisted.

The lovely granddaughter of Richard Marquis of Queensbury was the queen of beauty. She was then Lady Seymour, and afterwards became Duchess of Somerset. Many of the great houses of England supported the affair, and a long list of rules was drawn up, which look as though they were composed thirty years later by the Marquis of Queensbury. Hitting below the belt and "side-swiping" with the lance are penalized as "unholy acts" and the contestants were bestowed upon those who broke the most lances against the shields of the opponents. The contestants were the Earl of Eglinton himself, the Marquis of Waterford, the Earl of Devon, the Earl of Cassilis (pronounced "Castles"), Lord Alford, the Hon. Captain Gage, Sir Frederick Johnston, Captain Hereford, Captain Parrie and Messrs. Lamb, Boothby, Hopkins, Jennings and Lechmere.

The lists occupied a space of about four acres. There were two galleries for the accommodation of spectators, one for the friends of the earl and of the knights, and the other for strangers who had provided themselves with tickets. No charge was made for these. They were distributed gratuitously to all persons of respectable appearance who applied to a certain number of money in his revival of chivalry, and had the worst of luck as far as the weather is concerned, he may be said to have gained lasting fame thereby as it is impossible for a historian to write on the subject of tournaments without giving due space to the famous and historical one that took place at Eglinton.

CURED OF PILES AFTER 20 YEARS

Many people have got the impression that piles can only be cured by a surgical operation, with all the attendant suffering, risk and expense. There is an easier way: by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. No risk, no danger and little expense is attached to this treatment, and results are highly satisfactory.

Mr. John M. Bates, gardener, St. Lambert, Que., writes: "I had piles for twenty years, and tried all kinds of ointments and medicines, but they did me no good. It was getting worse and suffering more from the dreadful itching all the time. I used three boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and today I am perfectly cured. There has not been a sign of the old trouble for six months, and it leaves me in perfect health today, whereas I was in agony for about twenty years. I can highly recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment as a positive cure for piles."
