The Indian empire is represented in the royal household by Her Majesty's Indian secretary, and her personal attendant, a very handsome Asiatic, who is always gorgeously appareled in scarlet white and gold. And these men have their own servants and their own suite of apartments in the castle, where the fraggrance of curry is said never to be absent. The Queen is very good to her servants and takes a great interest in their personal welfare. And of course the happiness of her humble subjects helps to make her happiness. But I wonder how many women would be contented with the [dull and humdrum life led during the larger portion of the year by Fngland's queen.
