Berlin, Cct. 13.—Dispatches from St. Petersburg say Prince Tuan has gone into the interior of China, where, "with warm reception from some of his the consent of the insincere Chinese government," he is arousing the population to arms' against the foreigners. Russia, it is added, believes the best way to solve the present problem is to humble the court and bring the Chinese to terms, A military writer in the Tageblatt advocates the same method, which a number of papers endorse. The Lokal Anzeiger advises the adoption of strong measures against the Chinese Emperor. The Russian suggestion to submit the Chinese question to the Hague arbitration court is denounced by the press. A foreign office official informed a representative of the Associated Press, who question him regarding the Hague suggestion, that this plan is impracticable, since the work of estimating the damages must be done in China. Government circles, though the officials are not willing to say so, continue to believe that the Chinese campaign will last long, possible for years, unless Emperor Kwang Hsu is induced to return Pekin, which is not deemed very at the Exposition. In one of the coolest and freshest corners of the Paris exhibition there stand the representative structures of two countries which are now the scene of sanguinary events-the Transvaal and China. Though visitors do not expect to see scenes of strife in the exhibition, nevertheless curiosity leads them to the corner occupied by the pavilions of China and the Transyaal, and, aided by imagination, they are not deceived.

Toward the extremity of the left-hand gallery of the Trocadero palace rises the monumental gate of the Chinese exhibition. It is a faithful reproduction of that at the entrance to the Temple of Confucius at Pekin. It is thick and imposing, and painted in red, green, yellow, and white. Peaceful promenaders pass under this gate all day long, meet ing equally peaceful Chinese selling their native wares. Out in Pekin a savage mob rushes and shrieks about the same gate, painted in the same colors, and equally as thick and imposing. Once through the gate one finds one's self at the edge of a sheet of water, in the middle of which a fountain plays with a soft murmur. Among the trees are the blood-red painted pavilions, with their curious roofs turned up at the four corners. There has been some discussion as to what will happen to the exhibit if Europe is compelled by the force of events to formally declare war upon China. The section might be closed, and any property within the gates belonging to the Chinese government would be at the mercy of the French government. This strange ending may, however, be avoided. It is possible to obtain in the section a fairly accurate idea of life in the Chinese capital, but the exhibit is shorn of many familiar, if unpleasant, features.
