BURIED UNDER THE SNOW.

The Sorrow of a Lighthouse Keeper The lonely lighthouse keepers at the mouth of the bay have had a dreary and bitter winter of it. The following pathetic tale comes from Deer Island lighthouse, in a letter to the inspector of lighthouses, John Kelly.

Linwood Lord is the watcher at this lonely outpost. On the 12th of last month, his daughter, Florence, a bright little tot, died. The lighthouse is situated some hundred yards from the island, but the weather was so severe that the afflicted father could not pass over to bury his child in the lonely burial spot there. So he had to bury her under the deep snow close to the lighthouse until more element weather
