After an exhaustive inquiry occupy ing three evenings, the coroner's jury panelled to inquire into the death of Charles O'Regan, who died shortly after coming out of the ring where he had been boxing with Fred Northrup, last Monday brought in the verdict as given above. This verdict was unanimous and was reached after fifty minutes' deliberation

O'Regan was hit mostly in the stomach. I saw O'Regan get a jab in the mouth. O'Regan was the cleverst boxer of the two. Northrup was taller and his reach probably longer. These would be advantages. O'Regan had an advantage in science, which would probably be equivalent to Northrup's advantages. Northrup seemed to be hugging O'Regan. I never knew O'Regan to be unfit for boxing. I do not recollect having heard about O'Regan getting hurt in his youth. I always found Northrup a good, square boy. I know Robert Nixon. He approached me to get up this sparring match. ADDRESS TO THE JURY.

A. W. Macrae, counsel for Fred

Northrup, then addressed the jury, remarking that for this privilege he was indebted to the courtesy of the coroner. Manslaughter, with which his client was charged, was a very serious crime, the maximum penalty being imprisonment for life. Mr. Macrae reerred to the fact that frequently people embarked on undertakings which resulted in tragedies, when they had no expectation that anything of the kind would take place. Such unfortunate persons always carried with them a feeling of remorse, which was a great punishment. He referred to the excellent character that his client had always borne, and asked the jury to imagine themselves in his temble If there was any doubt in the minds of the jury as to Fred men under the free trade policy are in the death of Charles O'Regan, do death of the deceased, then the prister working that after viewing the oner should receive the benefit of it. this parlous state, Mr. Jerome might body of Charles O'Regan, afore- He believed that the jury would come * said, and hearing the evidence * to the conclusion, as he had, that O'ing for them a remission of the tax of brought before us, do find that the Regan's death was due to a regretone hundred per cent. on their tea.

The contest between O'Regan and Northrup was licensed by the mayor, and all those who had given evidence had stated that it was properly conducted. He referred to the fact that the dead boy's father had, unsolicited, given evidence to the effect that the relations of his son and Fred Northrup were most cordial. If there was any man who would naturally be prejudiced and have bitterness in his heart towards Northrup, it surely would be the father of the deceased. Mr. Macrae closed by reiterating his confidence that the jury would find his client blameless.

He thought also that the contest was a prize fight. The coroner said there was no doubt that Northrup had no idea of causing O'Regan's death. The question, however, for the jury to decide was whether O'Regan's death was caused by a blow or not. A large crowd of spectators remained in the court room until the jury reached their verdict. The bladder seemed irritated, and my physician said that it was catarrh caused by a protracted cold which would be difficult to overcold which would be difficult to over-come on account of my advanced years. I took Peruna, hardly daring to believe that I would be helped, but I found to my relief that I soon began to mend. The irritation gradually subsided and the urinary difficulties passed away.
