SAINT JOHN, NEW-BRUNSWICK, FRIDAY, AUGUST 31, 1857.

NUMBER 51.

THE ST. JOHN CHRONICLE, PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY AFTERNOON, BY WILLIAM DURANT, AT HIS OFFICE IN THE BRICK BUILDING, KING STREET, ST. JOHN, N.B.

Steamer "Maid of Erin" NOTICE. THE well known and favorite Steamer "MAID OF ERIN," Capt. John Deane, having been thoroughly overhauled and put in a complete state of repair, is ready to resume her previous route, viz. leaving St. John for Digby and Annapolis every Monday morning at 8 o'clock, returning on Friday evening.

A MEDICAL REVOLUTION! THE WORLD UNANIMOUS. HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT. THE GREAT COUNTER BRITANNY! The virus of disease often makes its way to the internal organs through the pores of the skin. This penetrating Ointment, meeting under the hand as it is rubbed in, is absorbed through the same channels, and, reaching the seat of inflammation, promptly and invariably subdues it, whether located in the kidneys, liver, lungs, or any other important organ. It penetrates the surface to the interior, through the countless tubes that communicate with the skin as summer rain passes into the festered earth diffusing its cool and regenerating influence.

Little streams, in light and shadow, Flowing through the pasture meadow; Through the forest dim and wide; Through the heath's still and small; By the cascade, by the fall; By the brook, by the mill; Turning here and there a mill; In the vale, in the dale; Little streams, I love you ever!

covered with the remains of extensive gardens, pavilions, mosques, and sepulchres, connecting the village of Cuttack with the new city of Delhi, from which it is nearly three miles distant southward, an exhibiting one of the most striking scenes of desolation to be anywhere met with. The celebrated Cuttack Mosque, a very handsome and richly adorned building from a polygon of 27 sides, in five stages, gradually diminishing in circumference to the height of 212 feet, 16 inches, which is crowned by a superb cupola rising from four arches of red granite, is ascended by a spiral staircase of 35 steps, and between each stage a balcony runs round the pillar. The old Pantheon, a mass of red granite from the Ganges, has been a solid structure in a plain and monumental style of architecture. It contains a high black pillar of cast metal, of Hindu construction, and originally surmounted by a figure of Vishnu, which Emperor Shah afterwards enclosed within the court of his palace, covering it with Arabic and Persian inscriptions. The tomb of Humayun is of Gothic architecture, surrounded by a large garden, with terraces and fountains nearly all of which is now gone to decay. The garden is surrounded by a wall of white marble, and the fountain is a platform ascended by a flight of granite steps, in the tomb itself, a square building, with circular apartments within, about as large as the Hadfield Library (London), is surmounted by a dome of white marble. From the top of this building the desolation is seen to extend to the west, in which direction the Pantheon stood, apparently to a range of hills, or eight miles off.

THE ADULTERATION OF LIQUORS. It is a saying somewhere that "if you will not get genuine Port, you must go yourself to Oporto, make your own wine, and ride outside the barrell all the way home." And indeed an universal thing has the adulteration of liquors become that it may well be doubted if the production of pure Port is not almost a "lost art" even at Oporto. An evidence of the fearful extent to which adulteration is carried, as well as of the open and systematic manner in which adulteration is rapidly rising into an "art" is the use and publication of the book from which the following recipes were extracted. The book is worthy a notice, as a mere unveiling of its contents and of the details of the adulterating process which induced its publication, ought to have a more beneficial effect, at least by putting purchasers on their guard, than has been of argument against the use of spirits or their scores of "Prohibitory Laws."

When Heber visited the Emperor, he proceeded that through a long vaulted aisle like that of a Gothic cathedral, with a small octagonal tower in its centre, all of granite, and all finely carved with inscriptions from the Koran, and with flowers. This ended in a ruinous and exceedingly dilapidated building, which Heber called the "Palace of the Emperor," but which was really a ruinous gateway led into a very handsome and striking court, with low but richly ornamented buildings. "Opposite to us," he writes, "the Emperor has a beautiful open pavilion of white marble, richly carved, flanked by two bushes and fountains, and a tapestry and striped curtains hanging from the roof. The Emperor's apartments are in a building of white marble, with flowers and leaves of green serpentine, lapis lazuli and jasper, and evidently the work of an Indian artist. The Emperor's apartments, also, a splendid pavilion of marble, on a well behind the throne a small group representing Orpheus playing to the beasts, supported by mosaic paintings of birds, animals and flowers, indicates that the work of European hands. The inner or chief hall of audience, which is open on one side to the court of the palace, and on the other to the garden, is a quadrangular terrace of white marble, with a pillared arches highly carved and ornamented with gilt Indian flowers, and inscriptions in the most elaborate Persian character, is laid similarly to the other apartments. This part of the palace is in tolerable preservation. The Shalima Gardens, highly cultivated in "Lalla Rookh" style, also formed by Shah Jehan, and are said to have cost a million sterling; but "laughing Cebes has reassumed her reign," the gardens having been converted to agricultural purposes. The Jumna Masjid, the largest and handsomest place of Mussulman worship in India, was built in six years by Shah Jehan, at an expense of ten lacs of rupees. It stands on a small rocky eminence, and is a masterpiece of architecture. The ascent to it is by a flight of 35 stone steps, through a handsome gateway of red stone, the doors of which are covered with arabic brass. The terrace on which it is built is about 1000 yards square, and surrounded by an arched colonnade with octagon pavilions at convenient intervals. In the centre is a large square reservoir, supplied by a siphon from the canal. On the west side is the mosque itself, an oblong form, 201 feet in length; its whole front covered with a large number of small and compartments in the cornice filled with Arabic inscriptions. It is approached by another flight of steps, and entered by three golden gates, ornamented by a series of domes. At the flanks are two minarets, 120 feet high, of black marble and red stone alternately, each having three projecting galleries, and their summits decorated with arches of white marble. The ascent to which is by a winding staircase of 150 steps of red stone. This truly noble structure is in good repair, being maintained by a grant from the British Government of 3000 rupees yearly. Not far from the palace is a mosque of red stone, surrounded with three gates domes, which Shah Jehan had built, and which he called the "Mosque of the Emperor." There are about forty mosques, one erected by the daughter of Aurangzeb, contains the tomb in which she was interred in 1719; some bear the marks of great antiquity, especially the Kala Masjid, or Black Mosque, built of dark colored granite by the first Panjab conqueror. It is exactly on the plan of the original Arabian mosques. The presence of such a number of fine mosques, as far as the eye can reach, is Initiation of Red Wine - Water one gallon; sulphuric acid, to the strength of weak vinegar; honey one pint; powdered alum one half ounce; one sliced red beet, one half pint strong tincture of logwood; one drop of oil of winter green dissolved in a wine-glass full of alcohol, and one half grain of ambergris, rubbed up in sugar; one pint tincture of grains of paradise. This wine, when prepared on a large scale, can be made at a very low price, as the honey is the only article of value in the ingredients. The grains of paradise being substituted for spirit, and any quantity of it can be prepared at the shortest notice. The coloring is best prepared in barrels for use.
