Details of Flight Across Atlantic

CAPT. ALCOCK SAYS HE WAS NOT LONELY ON TRIP.
LONDON, June 15.—When the Vickers-Vimy biplane, driven by Capt. John Alcock, was first sighted crossing the Irish coast, says a dispatch in the Daily Mail from Clifden, Galway, an airplane to render assistance. This machine landed near the Vimy but, unfortunately, was wrecked, owing to the coarseness of the ground.
When the Vickers-Vimy machine landed, Lieut. Arthur W. Brown, the navigator, said to Capt. Alcock: "What do you think of this for a fancy navigating?" and the pilot of the machine responded: "Very good." The two men, who had just completed an epoch-making voyage, then shook hands.

Injured at Landin.
When the machine reached the ground the two aviators were badly to the ground and it was found that Lieut. Brown was slightly injured on the nose and mouth by the jolt given the machine when it struck the ground. Both men were deaf and dazed and were unable to walk steadily for some minutes.
They quickly recovered, however, and were escorted to the wireless station in triumph, being given the best hospitality available. They distributed cigarettes as souvenirs and gave away the small dog and cat which were treasured during the trip. The entire equipment was raised out by the downpour during the journey. A Trying Ordeal.

Describing the trip, the aviators said they had a very trying ordeal. Capt. Alcock saying that the sun came out only once, when the biplane had attained a height of 11,000 feet. Only three astronomical observations were possible during the voyage. The altitude of the machine varied from a few feet from the water up to 12,000 feet and the flyers never sighted a single ship.

"I did not know once during the flight whether I was upside down or not," said Capt. Alcock. "Once we ascended hurriedly, when we saw the green Atlantic only 30 feet below." The breaking away of the propeller generation current for the wireless apparatus soon after the start prevented the men from communicating with the shore. When it happened Lieut. Brown noticed that the propeller had carried away with it one of the stay wires, but he did not tell Capt. Alcock until after they had landed at Clifden. When Alcock learned of the accident he said: "I would have turned back had I known." A Thrilling Adventure.

Weather conditions were very bad during the trip and Lieut. Brown had to climb from his seat to clear the ice away from the petrol gauge. By noon to-day both men were looking perfectly well and willingly distributed autographs to admirers. Capt. Alcock wanted to fly to England, in a borrowed plane, but his companion observed: "I have had enough flying for a bit."
Capt. Alcock exhibited a bunch of rainsoaked letters which he had been asked to mail if the flight were successful, saying: "I am the first Transatlantic postman."
140 Miles Per Hour.

The two aviators said they were only once in real danger, when the machine went into a flat spin, owing to the pilot being unable to know how the machine was working. Lieut. Brown noticing that the compass needle was swinging from side to side—the first indication that something was wrong—managed to get Capt. Alcock to understand the difficulty.
The machines traveled at a rate of 140 miles an hour at times and the pilot once found himself diving straight toward the surface of the ocean. He was so near the water that he had to "switch" the machine from its dive, so quickly that it most looped the loop. He says the machine would have crumpled up had it touched the water at the speed it was then traveling.

Plane Slightly Wrecked.
Major Mayo, of the Aero Club, has inspected the biplane, which is being guarded by soldiers, and has found the seats on the marked parts of the machine intact, according to a wireless dispatch received here from Clifden.

In landing the pylons of the center section, as well as the main spar of the lower plane, were broken, but the steel construction of the fuselage saved the machine from further damage.
Then two engines ran smoothly throughout the flight and when the airplane landed there were still 200 gallons of petrol left in the tank sufficient for a further flight of 10 hours.

Was Not Lonely.
GALWAY, Ireland, June 16.—The correspondent endeavored to get Alcock to describe the impressions he had during the flight while the aviator was at Clifden to-day.
"It is difficult to sum them up," said Alcock. "It is curious to be able to say that I had no sense of remoteness. I have done considerable night flying and my sense of loneliness has worn off long ago. I don't think that either of us had any thought of what we were flying over, being merely intent on getting across."
"We wanted to get the job done, and I can tell you that we were jolly well pleased when we saw the coast."

"I believe the great secret of long distance flying under such conditions as we experienced is to nurse your engine. I never opened the throttle once. The machine itself has a speed of 50 miles an hour, but, without opening the throttle and with a following wind, we averaged 120."
Were Electric Clothing.
Emphasizing the bodily comfort of the garage, Capt. Alcock said: "I wore electrically-heated clothes as an experiment, but the machine itself was so snug that it was unnecessary to switch on the current."
