Questions and Answers. Veterinary.

Crippled Pigs.

Two of my pigs of about 110 pounds, fed on shorts, oats and barley, are stiff when walking, do not eat well, and stand with backs humped up.

A. J. H.

Ans.—This is partial paralysis, due to digestive trouble. Purge each with 3 ounces Epsom salts, and follow up with 3 grains nux vomica three times daily. Get the grain chopped and in addition feed raw roots daily, and allow plenty of exercise.

Fatality in Colt.

Colt in fine condition and splendid flesh appeared in the best of health, and in sixteen hours he was dead. A post-mortem revealed a bunch of worms about ten inches long, and the stomach was rotten, and some bots were attached to it.

G. B.

Ans.—As you do not give any of the symptoms before death, it is hard to diagnose definitely. Inflammation of the stomach was evidently the cause of death. I do not think this was caused by the worms, and certainly not by the bots. All horses that were on pasture during the summer have bots. It is very probable the trouble was the result of indigestion, which frequently occurs without appreciable cause. It is quite possible that a veterinarian could have treated successfully if called early, but it is a disease that an amateur cannot treat.

Miscellaneous Veterinary

1. I bred a heifer to a certain bull. All cows that have been bred to him are aborting. How can I prevent abortion in my heifer, and protect my other cows from infection?

2. How should the bull be treated?
3. Thrifty young cow has a hard cough that seems to come clean from her tail.

4. Give details for applying the tuberculin test.

5. Give treatment for a cold in a cow.

6. What makes a good condition powder for a cow?

G. O.

Ans.—1. Remove the heifer at once from your herd. If she be infected, you cannot prevent it now. If she aborts, it will be wise to destroy her, or dispose of her in some way, but on no account allow any communication in any way, by attendants or otherwise, between her and the herd, and give the stables a thorough coat of hot-lime wash, with five-per-cent. carbolic acid.

2. Do not breed him for at least six months. Isolate him, and flush his sheath out daily with a warm solution of corrosive sublimate, 30 grains to a gallon of water. When bred again, flush his sheath both before and after service.

3. The symptoms indicate tuberculosis, but the tail is comparatively safe. The tuberculin test is the only definite means of diagnosis.

4. Take the temperature every three hours for twelve hours before injection. Then inject about 60 drops of a 10-per-cent. solution of tuberculin in a 1-per-cent. solution of carbolic acid. Disinfect the seat of injection with a 5-per-cent. solution of Creolin before injection. We usually select the loose skin, just behind the shoulder blade for injection. In nine hours after injection, take the temperature again, and every three hours afterwards until twenty-four hours have elapsed. If the temperature increases two degrees or more, higher than it was before injection, it indicates that the animal is tubercular. A test made by an amateur is usually not reliable. He does not understand the use of the thermometer, nor how to use a hypodermic syringe, and is very liable to overlook or not understand important details. The test is essentially the work of a veterinarian, or a person who has had special instructions, and actual practice, under the supervision of a veterinarian.

5. Keep in comfortable, well-ventilated stall. Steam the nostrils three times daily. Give 1 dram quinine and 2 drams chloride of potassium three times daily, and feed on laxative food. Of course, complications must be treated according to symptoms.

6. A tablespoonful three times daily of equal parts sulphate of iron, gentian, ginger, and nux vomica.
