The storm that passed over this section about 3 o'clock Wednesday morning was one of the most violent of the season. Lightning descended to the season. Lightning descended to the earth in a number of places. On an island in Charleston lake a pine tree was shattered; in Escott front a farmer had six head of cattle. In this latter case only one animal was struck, and its head was reduced to a pulp. The other animals were found lying near it.

This taste has remained with me all my life.

"I was educated at the Lycee of Nantes, where I remained till I had finished my rhetoric classes, when I was sent to Paris to study law. My favorite study had alway; been geography, but at the time that I went to Paris I was entirely taken up with literary projects. I was greatly under the influence of Victor Hugo, indeed very excited by reading and re-reading his work. At that time I could have recited by fir art whole pages of Notre Dame de Paris, but it was his dramatic work that most influenced me, and it was under this Faris, but it was his dramatic work that most influenced me, and it was under this influence that at the age of 17 I wrote a number of tragedies and comedies not to no nition novels. Thus I wrote a five-act trage dy in verse, entitled, 'Alexander VI,' which was the tragedy of the Borgia Pope. Another five-act tragedy in verse, written at that time, was 'The Gunpowder Plot.'

Under Louis XV. was another tragedy in verse, and for coursely there was one in Ave sots and verse scalical Las Houreux da Jour.' All this work was done with the greatest care and with the constant procoupation after style before me. I have always sought after style, but people have never given me credit for this.

"Teams to Paris as a student just about the time when the greatest and all that she meant was disappearing from the Latin quarter. I cannot say that I frequented many of my fellow-student's rooms, for we Bretons, you know, are a clauniab people and nearly all my friends were schoolmates from Nantes, who had come up to the Paris University with me.

"I was living then on a small pension allowed me by my father, and had dreams of wealth which led me into one or two speculations at the Bourse—which did not realize my dreams, I may add. But I derived some benefit from my frequentation of the coulisses of the Bourse, for it was there that I got to know the romance of commerce, the fever of business, which I have often described and used in my novels.

"Whilst speculating at the Bourse and collaborating with Hignard in operate and chanson, and with Alexandre Dumas in comedy. I contributed short stories to the magazines. My first work appeared in the 'Musee des Families,' where you can find a story of mine about a madman in a balloon, which is the first indication of the line of novel that I was destined to follow.

"I was 25 when I wrote my first ecisntific novel. That was "Five Weeks in a Balloon," It was published by Hetzel in 1861, and was a great success at once."

I here interrupted Mr. Verne and said: "I want you to tell me how you wrote that novel and why, and and what preparation you made for it. Had you any knowledge of ballooning, any experience?"

"None whatever," replied Mr. Verne, "I wrote Five Weeks in a Balloon, not as a story about ballooning, but as a story about ballooning, but as a story about ballooning, but as a story about a substance of the construction of the first way and the princ

"Then you had no scientific studies to g "Then you had no scientific studies to go upon?"

"None whatever. I may say that I have never studied science, though in the course of my reading I have picked up a great many odds and ends which have become useful. I may tell you that I am a great reader and that I always read with the pencil in the hand. I always carry a notebook about with me and immediately jot down, like that person in Dickens, anything that interests me or may appear to be of possible use in my books. To give you an idea of my reading, I come here every day after lunch and immediat ly set to work to read through 15 different papers, always the same 15, and I can tell you that very little in any of them escapes my attention. When I see anything of interest down it goes. Then I read the reviews. "How could you do what you have done without scientific study of any kind?" If had the goal forther to enter the world at a time when there were dictionaries on every 10 sible subject. I had just to turn up in my dictionary the subject I wanted it formation upon and there it was. Of course, in my reading I picked up a quantity of information and, as I said, I have a great smaller of scientific odds and ends in my head. It was thus that, when one day in a Paris cafe I read in the Ciecle that a man could travel round the world in 80 days it immediates at the could be supplied to the course in the ciecle that a man could travel round the world in 80 days it immediates attached to the course in the ciecle that a man could travel round the world in 80 days it immediates attached. world in 80 days, it immediately struck me that I could profit by a difference of meridian and make my traveler gain or me that I could profit by a difference of meridian and make my traveler gain or lose a day in his journey. There was my denouement ready found. The story was not written until long after. I carry ideas about in my head for years—10 or 15 years sometimes—before giving them form.

"People often ask me, as you have done, why I reside in Amiens, I who am so throroughly Parisian in my instincts. Well, because, as I have told you, I have Breton blood in me and love calm and quiet, and could never be happier than in a cloister. A quiet life of study and work is my delight. I came to Amiens first in 1857, where I met the lady who is now my wife, and who at that time—her name was Madame de Vianne—was a widow with two little daughters. Family ties and the quiet of the place have bound me to Amiens ever since. It is a good thing, for, as Hetzel said to me the other day, if I had lived in Paris I should have written at least 10 novels less than I have done. I enjoy my life here very much. I have told you how I work in the morning and how I read in the afternoons. I take as much exercise as I can. That has been the secret of health and strength. And I continue very found of the theater, and whenever there is a play at the little theater here you may be sure to find Mme. Jules Verne and her husband in their box.
