THE LADELL CO.

Chatham has been fortunate in se-curing a number of good musical en-tertainments this season, but there are none which have been more en-thusiastically received or better appreciated than the LaDell Concert Company which appeared at the Grand last evening. This company is com-posed of artists whose ability in the musical line is unquestionable and the performance last evening was very pleasing and entertaining,

Miss Marietta LaDell, the star of the company, is a bost in herself and is well capable of entertaining an audience for a whole evening. Among her humorous pieces "Delsarte" and "Gus and me" secend to be the favorites, and when she appeared in "Jamie" and "Ben Hur" (by special request) she showed forth her deep elocution-ary powers in a measure which called forth enthusiastic applause.

Frank Blackford, violinist, and Miss Teressa Flanagan, soprano, were equally good in their parts and were vigorously encored after each of their selections. The company put on a very high class entertainment, and although the house was will filled they deserved a far greater patronage than they re-

THE TYRANNY OF TEARS.

Mr Reeves-Smith, the talented Eng-ish comedian, returned to the Grand Opera House last evening with Haddon Chambers' comedy, the tyranny of Tears. Mr. Chambers is an Australian, whose best known play herea-bouts is Capt. Swift, and he is among the eleverest of play writers now residing in London. The Tyranny of Tears is, probably, his best work, and it deserves to be so credited, judging from the performance of it last even-ing. The title, in itself, is at once apt and striking. The play deals with the trials and tribulations of Clement Parbury, authur, who engages Miss Clara Woodward, an attractive looking and extremely sensible young lady, as his secretary. Mrs. Parbury, a wife for five years, possesses a highly emotional nature, and is ever ready to draw on her will of tears when her husband says or does something that hurts her susceptible organism. It is tears, tears, tyrannical tears when Mr. Parbury, apparently, shows too much concern for his own wants and the pretty secretary, and there is an extra overflow when Mrs. Parbury discovers Miss Woodward kissing her husband's photograph. B sides the tears there is an instant demand for the secretary's dismissal.

Parbury, however, is firm, without knowing the cause of his wife's outburst, and Miss Woodward stays, while Mrs Parbury goes. Of course, this part of the ceremony ends in the wife, and not the husband, who admits being in fault. Mr. Parbury has a cynical, cold blooded friend, George Gunning, who thaws out sufficiently to fall in love with the pretty secretary, leaving everybody completely happy when the final curtain falls. The acting of the play was in keeping with its brilliancy of dailogue and smartness of action. Mr Reeves-Smith has the true comedy balance in his characterisations, and his Parbury was delightful throughout for its sin-cerity and finish, Miss Margaret Robinson, as Mrs Parbury, was also clev-ning , contributed to the success of the presentation in a marked manner. Miss Marie Rawson, as the martyred secretary, completed the work of the quartet of principles in a way to show her a very competent actress. Henry Rich, as Col. Armstrong, and J. Warren Keane as Evans, did capable work. The players were given a number of

A partnership between Fred. F. Quinn, late of the firm of Geo. Step-hens, Quinn & Douglas, and A. H.
