that seems to be destroying cabage and other vegetables rapidly, we give what has been tried with considerable ancess in former years. Take a handful of nitrate of possah and dissolve in a pailful of water and sprinkle the plants with the scintion. It can be done most effectually with a large brush.

Bastaw is being used in the West in feeding hogs, cattle and horses. Unless the grain is well developed it does not pay ranged it for market but in any alege it can be fed to animals. It should be ground or soaked before feeding. Barley is a slesh-former in contradictination to com and other grains, which largely develop fat. In feeding to horses one half the quantity that would be given of oats is enough.

STRAWERRIES can be set in the fall in light scales. STRAWEERRIES can be set in the fall in light sandy soil, but in any case they should be mulched well with straw or erchardists on both sides giving their experience.

Salt for Cows.—By experiment it can easily be found that cows regularly "salt-d" will give more milk than those only receiving an occasional dose, and that a cow will give more milk on the days she gets salt chan other days. The natural deduction therefore is that in order to get, a larger quantity of milk the cow shend be "salted" every day. But there is also a right and a wrong time to give the salt. We would lay down as a rule from one to two tablespoonfuls of salt every morning early. We prefer the morning to the evening as the animal is generally more exercised during the day than the night, and our experience of evening "salting" has been that it tends to shrink the flow of milk.

A young man was frequently caution ed by his father to vote for "measure not men." He promised to do so, an soon after received a bonns to vote fo Mr. Peck. His father, astonished shis voting for a man whom he deeme objectionable, inquired the reason fo doing so, "Surely, father," said the sor "you told me to vote for measures, an if Peck is not a measure, I don't knowhat is."

destine and still remains a matter of dispute among leading erochardists. Both sides agree in one point, that the tree requires food year after year. Some claim that manure can be applied in a mulch and that the sod and grass protect the roots, while others contend that minure should be worked in with the soil and that grass draws away nourishment that would otherwise go to the tree. Upon the whole we side with these who advocate cultivating the soil continually. If after working in manure a protection is required for the roots it is easy to administer this in some good mulch. We would like to hear from sexperience.
