ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., THE LATE REV. CANON DUNFIELD

The Passing of Canon Dunfield.

On Saturday afternoon we chronicled briefly the passing of one of our best known and beloved citizens in the person of Canon Dunfield, the Rector of St. Thomas's Parish. His demise took place at 2.15 p.m., just before press hour. For the past thirty-five years Canon Dunfield played a considerable part in the religious, philanthropic and social life of Newfoundland, but more particularly of the Church of England.

Sixty-one years ago the Canon was born in Yorkshire, where he was brought up as a boy, and many of his better characteristics of the county of broad acres, open hearts and sweet voices, he brought to Newfoundland with him and retained throughout life. For generations Yorkshire has been famous for its many excellent church choirs, and its sweet voiced choristers. In this musical atmosphere the Canon was trained, and the benefit of it he shared in after years with his own choir and at public entertainments. As a young man he received his first theological training at Warrminster College and from there he passed on to St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, and came out here for ordination in 1876. He became incumbent of Trinity, and although he left there nearly 30 years ago, his name is still well remembered there.

Twenty-nine years ago he came to the city and began work with Canon Wood as Curate, and gradually enlarged the sphere of his labours until there was hardly a religious, scholastic or social movement with which he was not prominently identified. This in the year 1900 he succeeded Canon Wood as Rector, and about nine years ago the Bishop of Newfoundland raised him to a stall in the Cathedral.

To his pastoral labours Canon Dunfield gave incessant attention. In church music he took an intense delight, and to his sermon he gave much thought and care. As a preacher he occupied a high place. His discourses were marked by sound sense, clothed in chaste language and delivered in the clear, fervent voice of which made it always a joy to listen to him.

Apart from his parish labours, his work was multifarious. For 24 years he was Clerical Secretary to the Synod and became the Erskine May of its procedure and practices. For many long years also he was a member of the Executive Council of the Synod and most of the lesser Committee of the Synod, notably of the Council of Queen's Theological College, Spencer College, Committee, of the Directorate of Bishop Field College, of which he was Vice-Chairman, and of City School Board for Church Schools. For very many years he was Secretary and in reality the working head of the Church of England Orphanage, and it was always a pleasure to see the Canon passing among the orphans as a big brother with a helping hand, a smiling face, and a cheery word. Of a similar nature were his relations with the boys of the Church Lads Brigade, of which institution he was Battalion Chaplain.

In his parish, in his pulpits, as secretary and counsellor of many institutions, as a singer, a lecturer, he played a simple, manly, hearty unaffected part. A man of affairs, with multifarious calls and onerous duties, he liked the solitude of his study and to live among the scenes and characters depicted by Shakespeare and Dickens, and when summer came nothing delighted him more than the sweet solitude of the woods, communing with nature and whipping the ponds and living the life that Isaac Walton lived.

Canon Dunfield was essentially a manly man and a Christian gentleman, who did his duty in that state of life to which he had been called.

To his sorrowing wife, his son John, in Canada, and his son and daughters at home, we extend our sympathy.

YESTERDAY'S SERVICES AT ST. THOMAS'S CHURCH.

The love and esteem which the people of St. Thomas's parish bore for their pastor, the late deceased Canon Dunfield, was well exemplified yesterday, for though the worst storm of the season raged it was unheeded and the service in the forenoon was attended by one of the largest congregations which has been seen in St. Thomas's Church for a long time past. An air of sadness pervaded the church and there were evidences of mourning everywhere. The pulpit chancel and lectern were draped in black and the service was solemn and most impressive. The clergyman who officiated were Revs. G. H. Bolt, M.A. and C. H. Barton. The preacher was Rev. G. H. Bolt, a gentleman who was a fast friend of the deceased clergyman and who exhibited the profound grief he felt in preaching on such a sorrowful occasion. The preacher took as his text, "Lord, thou hast been a dwelling place in all generations (Ps. 90: 1). This the preacher said was the thought which animated Moses in the ancient days, and was the soul's comfort and stay. If such was true in ages past it was equally so now, and humanity realized more than ever that God is still our hope and refuge. Human life is evanescent and God is still the refuge of mankind. The emotion of the preacher in dwelling on the life of the deceased clergyman was evident to all present. He dwelt on the bonds of friendship and sympathy which had bound Rector and people together for upwards of 30 years, now alas severed forever. Canon Dunfield had shared in their joys and sorrows; he was a comfort in affliction, a faithful friend and wise counsellor, and the loss the parish has sustained in his death is an irreparable one. As to his work in the diocese the preacher paid a eloquent tribute. This was not particularly but was all-embracing. He was a wise counsellor in matters appertaining to the church, whose welfare he always had at heart. The preacher reminded the congregation that change and decay was the portion of this world, but God is still our refuge. Every death should be a summons to those remain, and this call should impel all to so regulate their lives that they would ensure to themselves blessings beyond the grave. Time is short and preparation for eternity urgent. Mr. Bolt made a touching reference to the family of the deceased clergyman and expressed the hope that the God who is our refuge and strength would comfort the widowed and fatherless, granting them the blessings which the world cannot give.

EVENING SERVICE.

Rev. G. H. Bolt took the evening service. Rev. Canon White, Rector of the Cathedral, preached, taking his text from Corinth. 2: 6, 9—"As dying and behold we live." He felt certain that the sorrow felt by the congregation and the community generally for the death of Canon Dunfield was no ordinary sorrow. A great man had fallen and it was difficult to get away from the loss that everybody felt. It is only natural that the people should feel the blow, for the deceased had labored long amongst us in active work in the parish. Since taking up the work of the late lamented Canon Wood, the work had gone on for nearly twenty years. Personally he (the preacher) felt that there was a strong significance about the death of his friend. When the deceased went to Trinity the first hymn he taught the boys in the old Sunday School was the well known—

"One sweetly solemn thought Comes to me o'er and o'er, I'm nearer my Father's home to-day Than ever I've been before."

"I feel certain," said Canon White that from the mission of Trinity there will go up heartfelt prayers for the family of the deceased, his old friends who loved him for his zeal in the Master's cause. Our friend and pastor has gone and lives now where suffering is not known. His memory will continue to live in the hearts of his children, whom he grounded in sacred duties. We lay his body in the dust where it will remain till the great day dawns and the shadows flee. We cannot have him back, but we can make use of the remembrance of him to aim at a higher and truer consecration of our lives to the Master's service. His family will be remembered by all his friends who will utter sincere prayers to help them bear their great sorrow. The Dead March in Saul was played while the congregation stood.

AT THE CATHEDRAL.

In spite of the stormy weather a large congregation assembled at the Cathedral in the morning. It was quite apparent that the parishioners deeply felt the loss sustained by St. Thomas's Church. The Cathedral stall which the deceased Canon occupied the past nine years was draped in black. In his sermon the Rector made a very touching reference to the deceased and the great loss sustained by the church. The congregation stood while the Dead March in Saul was being played. Rev. Jas. Bell, who preached at the evening service, spoke in touching terms of the great loss sustained by the church in the death of such a beloved and honored clergyman.

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral of the late Rev. Canon Dunfield will take place to-morrow. In the morning the remains will be placed in the parish church and will be interred in the Church of England Cemetery at 3 p.m.

The clergy will robe in the Vestry at 2.30 p.m.

At R. C. Cathedral.

Rev. Father O'Callaghan preached at Last Mass yesterday. After reading the Gospel of the day from the 4th chap. of St. Matt. in which it is told how the Devil tempted our Divine Lord, the rev. preacher drew a vivid picture of the temptation to drink afforded by the saloons of the city. He depicted in plain terms the heinousness of the sin of drunkenness and the misery that the saloon brought on the wives and children of the man who spent his money there. Drinking was the cause of a great deal of the hunger and poverty now raging in the city, and was the cause of keeping many away from Mass on Sundays and from their religious duties. Those who contributed to the sin of drunkenness had an awful responsibility to face.

In the evening the service consisted of Rosary and Benediction only owing to the weather and the small congregation. Rev. Fr. O'Callaghan gave Benediction.

Recording Music on New Machine.

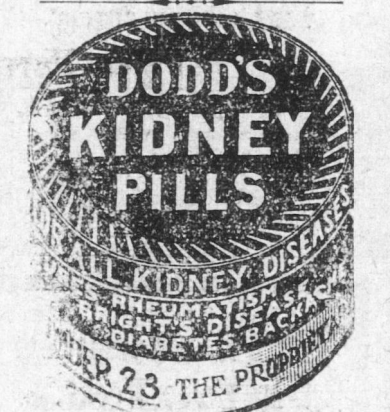

Instrument Invented That is of Great Help to Composer—No Notes Will be Lost Now.

A famous critic once made the rather sweeping statement that "more masterpieces were lost to music than were ever gained." Strange as this remark may at first appear, there was a good deal of truth in it. He meant, of course, that many wonderful passages which must have been played by great composers while idly fingering the piano were lost forever. The brain of the genius is notoriously fitful, and while working out one idea a dozen others might unconsciously be communicated to the fingers, and their value not appreciated until too late. Such tragedies must be frequent.

Now, however, by the aid of a new invention with the rather formidable name of the "Autoniscograph," nothing need be lost to music in the future. This ingenious apparatus, which can be attached to any piano, records on a roll of music paper every note that is played whether good, bad, or indifferent. Many an amateur can compose melodies in his head, and play them but few can write music as it should be written. Now this little machine does that part of the work.

It takes the form of a small cabinet with a glass front, and is fixed over the reading desk. A paper roll, marked with different colored lines, is placed inside and the clockwork machine set going. As it revolves, every note that is touched is marked upon it in typewriter fashion. When the sheet of paper is detached after playing, a graduated gauge is placed by the side of it which determines the exact position of the note.

Don Angelo Barbitri, the inventor, claims for it that it is not only accurately reproduces the notes played, but also the time. The value of the device, therefore, to every composer who extemporizes will be enormous. Mascagni, the famous composer, is using one of these machines in writing his new opera, "Eisibau."

Reciprocity at Ottawa.

Special to Evening Telegram. OTTAWA, This Morning. The failure of Congress to pass the bill ratifying the Reciprocity arrangement has added perplexity to the difficulties of the Laurier Government. The Reciprocity debate will be resumed on Tuesday, when Laurier will speak. On Tuesday the House may be confronted with resolutions to postpone the whole matter until the new Congress has ratified the arrangement. There is still much uncertainty as to the number of Liberals who will vote against the measure.
