Obituary.

ROBERT C. GRIEVE.

By the last Sachem the Hon. W. B. Grieve, C.B.E., left for England. His mission was a sad one, for at Smedley's Hydropathic at Matlock, in Derbyshire, his only son, Robert Cecil Grieve, was lying dangerously ill. Little hope was held out for the invalid's recovery, and yesterday the brave young man passed away. Bob Grieve had many friends in this city. A true-hearted and loyal friend, none was more deservedly popular in the regiment. Scion of a family of wealth and prominence, he was the comrade of poor and rich, influential and comparatively unknown alike. When the great Challenge was defiantly hurled against the Empire in August, 1914, Mr. Grieve was one of the first to answer. None knew better than he did the discomforts and hardships inseparable from a soldier's life. He came from a family of soldiers, and in the war many of his relatives distinguished themselves. To him the call admitted of only one response and there was no uncertainty, no hesitancy in the response. Bob Grieve sought no distinction. He was content to do a private's work and did it well and willingly, winning the friendship and affection of his fellow soldiers of all ranks by his modesty, reliability, generosity and readiness at all times to do the hardest tasks and face the greatest dangers without question or complaint. It was enough for him that his was the privilege and the joy of service. The training at Plesantville in the September days of 1914 was enough to tax the spirit and the temper of the toughest, but Mr. Grieve accepted it with a smile. No fatigue was too arduous, no duty too unpleasant. So it was right through his service. Not a man who returned from Gallipoli but had a good word to say of Grieve. With a laugh and a "cherio" the privations and discomforts of those days were dispelled. Danger had no terrors for Private Bob Grieve. He played the game of war as the public school boy plays cricket. There were many thousands of the Empire's young manhood that met the anxieties and perils of war in the same spirit, and to these daring, manly, cheerful and cheer-inspiring men the Empire owes the safety which is hers. The hospitals were filled with happy, hopeful men, ready for the issue, come what would, but determined to "carry on" so long as life should last. From the Gallipoli wounds he recovered and was soon again in the thickest of the fray, falling badly wounded at Beaumont Hamel. He returned to Newfoundland, but earlier in the year revisited the Old Country for treatment. At the age of 37 he has gone to answer the roll call in the world beyond, and carries with him the record of a good soldier, a loyal subject and citizen, and a square and honest man. "He played the game" is his epitaph. To his widow, a daughter of Geo. Hutchings of this city, his little daughter, and his father the sympathy of his friends and his go forth. Amongst the latter are his comrades in the war, without exception. Within a few hours he will be laid to rest whether in the Derbyshire Hills or in the land of his Scottish forefathers, and fidelity will say of him with prayerful hope and confidence, "after life's fitful fever he sleeps well."—Daily News.

Financing the Undertaking.

Our city sports are contributing generously to finance the undertaking of Bell's representation of Newfoundland at the Halifax marathon. Already half the amount needed has been subscribed and in a few days it is hoped to have enough money to at least pay some of the expenses of the trip. There is no doubt about it but Bell will make a showing to be proud of. He is in splendid form and has covered some measured distances in remarkably quick time.

Licensed Fish
Exporters Meet.

The collapse of the Italian market has made matters very precarious for exporters, in so far that the Banks will not now make advances unless a guarantee that the shipper has a license and that said license will not be cancelled. The latest rumor is that Mr. Hawes is to be sent to Italy to try and straighten out matters. This is like putting a red rag to a bull. The fish exporters held a meeting to-day in the Board of Trade Rooms when the situation was to have been discussed. The matter of keeping up the price in the foreign market and the cull will also be given consideration. The official business of the meeting was—

(1) To consider the question of cull under the Standardization Committee.

(2) To consider the advisability of guaranteeing that the prices in the foreign markets fixed by the Government will not be lowered for a definite period.

Very little was done in settlement of the matters and the meeting adjourned at 1.30 p.m.

Sugar, Sugar Sweet.

The question why the Government through the Food Control Board is persisting in bleeding the people of this country by having them to pay from 30 to 32 cents per lb. for sugar when even the rats and mice can have all they may consume for nothing, is to say the least, puzzling. It cannot be fear of exposure of the bad mess they have made of the situation, that is already in part, known. The only other reasons apparent are obstinacy, and fear of defeat by political opponents. We have millions of pounds of sugar stored on various premises in this city for which the Food Control Board is demanding from an outraged public 8 or 10 cents per lb. more than the article could be sold for if business men part of the situation is that of this part of the estimation is that of this stored sugar, thousands of dollars worth are being destroyed. In one store to our knowledge there are piles of sacks of sugar, wet, burst open, half empty and gnawed full of holes. Sugar is scattered everywhere about the floors. The conditions are so filthy that no person with any delicacy would, after seeing for themselves care to purchase.

Police Court.

An Italian seaman of the S. S. Glen Alan, charged with refusing duty and assaulting the captain, asked for an interpreter. It was ordered that an interpreter be procured before the case would be proceeded with.

Polish Boy's Romance.

Sammy Kac, a diminutive hunchback, has proved what pluck and perseverance will do for a youth in the face of adversity. Six years ago Sammy arrived in New York from Poland, and because of his physical defects was sent to Ellis Island and ordered to be deported. Friendless, with little money, and unable to speak the tongue, his plea that he be given a chance was heeded by the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society. He was finally permitted to enter the country under bond. With just about enough money to pay his fare he went to Detroit—and made good. Recently, he returned to Ellis Island to intercede for his mother and father, both 68 years old, and his brother Yankel (19), detained by the immigration authorities.

The very inspectors who had pitied the friendless deformed immigrant youth of 22 back in 1914 now found him a rich business man of Detroit. And Sammy proudly told them how he had taken a job at a lunch counter in a factory saving his slender earnings until he managed to start a business restaurant, and money poured in as the business grew. To-day he owns a general merchandise store, a temperance saloon, and a large restaurant. He has a fine home in Detroit, several automobiles, and is a prominent member of the Masonic order there. As his prosperity continued he sent for his sisters and brothers, and would have had his parents with him before now but for the war in Poland, which prevented their getting passports.

Origin of Our Modern Way of Saluting.

In the olden days, when a knight arrived at a neighboring castle, he took off his helmet to show his host that he did not suspect them of ulterior motives and did not anticipate a bang on the head with a sword or a mace. To enter helmeted amounted to saying that he preferred to run no risks. From this has come the custom of a man baring his head as greeting.

That a man should take off his right glove before shaking hands with a woman, comes from the same period, when travellers were gaunt.

The custom of firing salutes in the artillery comes to us from the time when guns were first used. It was then considered polite and courteous to any great personage who happened to arrive at the castle to load all the guns with shot and round—not blank—and to fire them off as he arrived at the threshold. The reason for doing this was to show how they trusted their guests by emptying all the guns just before they came into the range of them. This practice was not kept up very long. Blank rounds were soon fired, instead of real ones. They were not so dangerous!

The origin of saluting the quarter-deck when one boards a man-of-war is that in days gone by, when a crucifix was always placed in the stern of the vessel, it was, of course, saluted by all who came on board. Though the crucifix has disappeared the custom remains, and men salute the place where it used to be.

The custom of offering the right hand in greeting is practically the same as that of baring the head or of firing salutes. When one man met another in long-ago times he held out his unarmed sword-hand to show that his intentions were not evil.

The habit of mounting a horse on the near side came about because as a man wore his sword on the left he could not very well mount his horse on that side. This must be a comparatively recent custom, for swords were worn quite short and on the right side even in the first years of the Christian era.—Ex.

Not Quite the Same.

"Yes, that is where he made a mistake," said McLean, referring to the latest act of stupidity on the part of McFarlane.

"I don't call such an action as a mistake," replied old Cormack, dictatorially, "I call it a blunder."

"Well, it's all the same thing," returned McLean.

"No, you are wrong there," was Cormack's reply. "There's a great deal of difference between a blunder and a mistake."

"I should like to know what it is," answered McLean, skeptically. "Well, suppose you went to call on some friend, put an old umbrella into the stand, and took away a new one when you left, that would be a mistake; but suppose you put down a new one and brought away an old one, that would be a blunder; d'ye see?"
