The Heir of Bayneham —AND— Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER XXVI.

"Claude, I quite despise of you," said the countess haughtily, "I have explained my motives. Your wife is young, beautiful and untrained in the world's ways; it is your place to warn her, and see that her very innocence and simplicity do not cause her to act imprudently."

Lord Bayneham sighed; he was not quite clear as to what his mother really meant. He saw one thing plainly; she was not actuated by any unkind feeling toward Hilda, but before he had time to reply Barbara entered; her face glowing with exercise, and her hand filled with choice fern leaves.

"See, aunt," she said, touching Lady Bayneham's face with her fresh, red lips, "I have found all these treasures, they will make your collection complete. Good-morning, Claude; you look—well, not one half as bright as the morning."

For the first time she noticed the uneasy expression of both faces. "I am sorry to hear Hilda is not well this morning," she continued. "Pauline tells me she has not left her room; so I will go and see her."

"If you are not otherwise engaged, Claude," said Lady Bayneham, as Miss Earle quitted the room, "perhaps you would go with me round the shabby. I should like a short walk before the heat of the day comes on."

"I am quite at your service, mother," he replied listlessly, longing to be with Hilda, and to read, for his own satisfaction, the truth in her beautiful eyes.

Lady Bayneham wished some time to elapse before her son saw his wife, resolving to give a change to his thoughts and ideas. Of all fatal deeds that morning she had committed the most fatal.

pain and fatigue, bade them enter. Lady Hilda had risen, and was sitting in her little boudoir, the untasted breakfast on a table by her side. Lord Rayneham forgot even his errand when he saw her pale face and dim eyes.

"Have you been ill, Hilda?" he asked anxiously. "Why did you not send for me?"

"I did not sleep," she replied, looking with some surprise at her visitors, "and my head aches. Do you want me for anything?" she asked, "or is this a morning call?"

She tried to smile, but Lord Bayneham saw her pale lips tremble; then he remembered his errand.

"We have been puzzled," he replied, with a smile. "I have been for a walk with my mother this morning—quite a good boy, you see. Last night, when I left you, you wore this bracelet; it was fastened on your arm, and this morning I found it in the Lady's Walk, and you have not quitted your room. How came it there, Hilda?"

He held it out as he spoke, and a long, low cry came from her pale lips.

"Look!" cried Lady Bayneham, and Claude, springing forward, caught his wife as she was falling, pale and senseless, to the floor.

"There is your answer," said the dignified countess, as she rang the bell. "Take care, Claude. It seems to me that there is a dark shadow hanging over our house. Why should she faint. There was nothing so alarming in your words."

CHAPTER XXVII.

When Lady Hilda opened her eyes and saw her husband bending over her, a cry of fear and terror escaped her lips. The face that she had never seen stern or angry before was both now; there was no smile on his lips, such as he was wont to greet her with. Anxiety and sorrow, mingled with impatience, darkened his brow. Her illness alarmed him; he could not understand it.

"Did I frighten you, Hilda?" he whispered gently. "How your hands tremble! Surely you are not afraid of me. I have never been angry with you, love; only—I don't understand."

She tried to answer him, but her overwrought nerves gave way, and she wept passionately, bitterly, as one who had no hope. He soothed her with gentle words, such as one uses to a grieving child. Lady Bayneham quitted the room; tears and caresses were not in her line.

"You shall not be teased any more, just now," cried Lord Bayneham. "You have not strength to tell me anything. Lie down again and try to sleep; it grieves me sorely to see that face."

Her passionate weeping was abated; she lay passive and still, listening to his voice with a sick feeling of despair.

Lord Bayneham gave Pauline strict injunctions that her lady was not to be disturbed; he then left her, hoping she would sleep.

His mother anxiously awaited him, and asked hastily, "What is it, Claude? Why was Hilda so frightened?"

"She is very ill," he replied sadly, "and nervous, not frightened, mother. What can she have to fear? I was too abrupt."

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membrane, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membrane, a saved disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

North Pole.

SEEKING A NEW LOCATION.

LONDON.—The earth is wobbling on its axis, according to Colonel P. Jensen, the Danish scientist who returned recently from a degree measuring expedition into Greenland. He reports that Greenland is moving westward at the rate of 20 yards a year. This seems to confirm the recent reports of surprising climatic changes at the North Pole. It is now established that there is a periodic shifting of the latitude of the North Pole. The movement is difficult to detect because of the small area of the Pole—about the size of a tennis court. Some authorities say that the poles are gradually changing their positions; and that this alteration to the world's axis will in time mean that regions which are at present ice-bound will become warm and habitable countries.
