Nagel and Rubens in
"The Rejected Woman"

For the first time in their distinguished careers, Alma Rubens and Conrad Nagel have been starred together. They will be seen in "The Rejected Woman," which comes to the Nickel Theatre on Monday.

"The Rejected Woman" is a society romance written especially for these stars by John Lynch, veteran screen dramatist, and directed by Albert Parker.
The story is a novel treatment of the theme, "Must a girl have pretty clothes to get along?" This theme is developed in a swiftly moving drama with scenes in Canada and in New York. It has been lavishly set and costumed by the producers.
The principals of the supporting cast are Wyndham Standing and Leonora Hughes, the celebrated dancer.

The Habit of Obedience

The life of every individual is largely made up of habits. The time when habits are most easily formed is during the early years of life. It is, therefore, most important not only that habits are formed which will develop the character and strengthen the will, but that the formation of all good habits begin very early in life.
Everyone interested in the children of to-day desires to see them develop into good boys and girls, and later into the right kind of men and women. Good habits are, however, essential in the child's life if he is to become a good citizen.

There are many ideals and standards to be desired, many good habits that should be formed in early childhood—truthfulness, honesty, justice, cleanliness, service, courtesy and obedience. Of these, the latter is one of the most important.

It is a common criticism to-day that children do not obey. If this is a just criticism, the fault is with the adult, not the child. It is often too much trouble to insist upon obedience; but this course will lead only to greater trouble in the future. Sometimes it is right for the child to be told the reason for a request or command; but there are times when prompt and unquestioning obedience is essential. The habit of obedience will never be formed through making unreasonable or unjust demands; but a demand once made should be followed to the end by absolute obedience.

The latter, returning, will leave the garden party at Witless Bay at 9 p.m. instead of 10 p.m. as previously advertised, and Tor's Cove at 10 p.m. for St. John's.

Dear me, as I finished yesterday's story I could hardly wait to begin this one. Have you been worrying, Little Reader, for fear that big grayish-brown feathered body, with rusty red tail, that rushed by the Policeman Dog, belonged to Hungry Hawk? And you must have guessed by this time that this old robber bird was after Lady Love, the little rabbit's pretty bunny mother. Lucky that her little bunny boy had telephoned to the kind Policeman Dog. Even luckier that this good old dog was now so near at hand, with his trusty hickory stick in his paw.
As Hungry Hawk dashed by, just above his head, the Policeman Dog gave a leap after him. Right through the bushes he crashed, never caring whether the bright silver buttons on his blue coat were torn off, nor the braid on his trousers ripped to pieces. All he cared for was to save Lady Love.

"There, there, don't cry," urged the good old how-wow. "Dry your eyes and come along with me. Your little bunny will be wondering where you are. He must be worried to death by this time for it was he who called me on the 'phone that Hungry Hawk was about."

At once Lady Love dried her eyes and followed the good Policeman Dog down the Winding Trail through the Shady Forest. By this time all the Little Forest People had learned the news. Tiny Miss Aunt had seen the struggle between Hungry Hawk and the good Policeman Dog, and had told it to Tommy-Treetoad, who, in turn, had informed Professor Jim Crow. Of course the old blackbird had related it to Grandmother Magpie; after which this old lady bird had taken it upon herself to spread the news all over Rabbitland. She had even stopped at the office of the Rabbitville Evening News, and Reddy Comb, the little rooster newsboy, sold out all his papers, that evening before Mr. Merry Sun had a chance to pull on his purple night cap and go to bed in the Golden West. Yes indeed, every one was eagerly reading the paper that evening to learn the news of Lady Love's escape from Hungry Hawk, and in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

Bang! down came the trusty hickory stick.

The next minute he heard a beating of wings and a cry for help, and with another leap the good old dog, thank goodness, almost landed on the back of Hungry Hawk. Crash! Bang! down came the trusty hickory stick. "Squawk!" shrieked the old robber bird, dropping the poor frightened lady rabbit. Without waiting a moment the kind Policeman Dog lifted her in his paws and hurried away. Safest thing to do; just get away from the old bird for the time being and make sure to rescue the little lady rabbit. Sometime in the future the Policeman Dog hoped to catch that old robber bird, but just this very minute the best thing to do was to rescue the little rabbit's mother. And so he did, thank goodness!

Profits From Prophets

BUSINESSES THAT FIND IT PAYS TO KEEP THEIR OWN STAFF OF WEATHER PROFITS.

Weather conditions are a vital factor in every business, and several large companies keep private weather prophets, who are trained to observe the weather in relation to their particular business.

The London General Omnibus Company actually have hundreds of weather prophets in their employ. The London area is now so large that local weather conditions have to be carefully studied. Every inspector and timekeeper is instructed to report weather changes to the head weather prophet and traffic controller. The controller sits in a small room at Leicester Square, with a large map of the bus and Tube routes in front of him.
Suppose that a telephone message came through that rain is threatening at Hendon, and that the wind is from the northwest. The controller calculates that rain will fall along certain routes. If these routes run near the Underground, he orders extra carriages to be attached to the trains. If there is no Underground near, he orders extra buses to be sent out.

Food And The Forecast.
Catering is another business affected by changes in the weather, and one large firm of London caterers, which has branches throughout Britain, employs two whole-time weather prophets.

These men consider weather conditions in relation to food. They know, for instance, that a rise in temperature of four degrees sends up the sales of ice cream in London alone 25,000 gallons a day. Thus, if one evening they forecast a heat wave for the following day, the ice cream freezers are set to work on the extra 25,000 gallons that will be needed.

Railway catering is affected in a very peculiar way by weather prophecy. Every railway chef has to be his own prophet, for early in the morning, when he sends in his order, he has to guess what the temperature will be at midday. All food in the restaurant car is kept on ice. On a hot day the ice melts quickly, and therefore a larger supply will be needed than on a cool day.

Big stores, who have booked space for large advertisements in the daily papers, also keep an eye on the weather. If their private weather prophet forecasts rain for the morning, the firm will rush through a sale of macintoshes or umbrellas.
