HELEN MOIR

Love and Honour.
A TALE OF THE CLYDE.
CHAPTER XVIII.

THE RECOGNITION, AND WHAT IT LED TO.
Ere long Mrs Allerton grew absent and spoke fitfully, casting, however, repeated glances of inquiry at the stranger. Once, involuntarily, he had turned his eyes towards her, and from that momentary glance a singular influence came. These were familiar eyes—strangely, wonderfully familiar—and she felt as if she ought to know the face in which they were set. She searched that face—first generally, then feature by feature—and saw that it was one deeply lined. The brow was deeply creased by broad furrows; the bronze cheeks had the impress of haggardness; the mouth, the chin, and all else, were hidden under waves of curly hair—once auburn, but beginning now to be mixed with grey.

No, the features she did not recall. They were not such as she had seen before—at least not with that grave, haggard expression on them. But the eyes—the eyes—if she could obtain but another glimpse of them—if they would fully and directly meet hers, she might be able to identify and explain the associations they called up. She was determined to effect this object, and that at once, a little feminine ingenuously showing her how.

"I see, Mr. Bridgenorth," she exclaimed, "you are gazing at Miss Moir's eyes. What colour do you pronounce them to be? We had a dispute about it the other day."
"I should call them very dark blue," he quickly answered.
"Blue, most decidedly blue. You see, I was right, Helen. And mine, Mr. Bridgenorth; what colour is mine?"
"Yours, madam, is hazel," he replied, without once turning towards her.

"How can you say so without even looking at them? Pray examine again, and see if they are not of that changing hue which defies a name."
Thus pointedly asked to look, he was forced to turn round and meet her gaze—the keen searching gaze of the most intense inquiry.
For a moment only he stood it, then quickly withdrew his glance, repeating his opinion.
That brief moment was a moment of startling revelation to her, and she sat silent in doubt, in wonder, and amazement.

Helen's feverish impatience was meanwhile on the increase, and she thought how tiresome and unmeaning of Mrs Allerton to be asking silly, uninteresting questions about the colour of eyes, when she knew how they both panted to know if the stranger had any information to give them of the lost one in Australia. She resolved to introduce the subject herself.

"Pray, Mr. Bridgenorth," she asked, "is Australia as beautiful a country as Britain?"
"On the whole it is more beautiful," he replied. "It is vaster and grander in its lines of colouring."
"And finer in scenery even than this?" she cried, waving her hand towards the loch and the opposite mountains.
"No," he answered slowly, "and in a low tone, I know of no place which seems to me so lovely as this."
"How long were you in Australia, Mr. Bridgenorth?" suddenly asked Mrs Allerton.

There were some moments' silence ere he answered. Then he rejoined, "A long while—for many years."
"How many—? Pray say."
Another palpitating pause.
"Near to that."
"You are English, are you not?"
"Yes—yes. I was brought up in England."
"Helen, dear," said Mrs Allerton, "run along to the villa and tell Mary I have dinner ready for thee. Mr. Bridgenorth will dine with us."
"Ah—oh—ahem, my dear Madam, I—I could not think of it," cried Bridgenorth, starting half up.

Indeed but you shall. I will take no denial. Now that we have got you we shall keep you."
"But—but—my dress; pray, consider my dress."
"Never mind your dress. We are not formal, but free and easy at the seaside. Do go Helen. Mr. Bridgenorth and I will follow at our leisure."
Astonished, disappointed, and chagrined, Helen rose to comply with Mrs. Allerton's direction. Now that the conversation had gone in the wished-for direction, she expected the important inquiry to be followed up; yet at the supreme moment it was stopped by this strange, unlooked-for interruption, and she could not forbear casting a mute reproachful look towards her friend as she moved away. To her increased astonishment Mrs. Allerton's face was excessively pale, and she seemed greatly agitated—answering her look by another imploring her to be gone.
In utter bewilderment she went away, tremblingly excited, nor daring to look back to the villa, where she left the others seated.
David Bridgenorth had sat down again, and remained perfectly silent, with his face averted, till a shaking hand was laid upon his arm, when, with an impulsive start, he turned his head towards Mrs. Allerton.

"Edwin—oh, Edwin, it is you," gasped the latter, pressing his arm with a convulsive clutch.
Once more he founded to his feet, and his impulse was to rush from her, but she clung to him with a passionate energy.

Two Irishmen on a sultry night, immediately after their arrival in India, took refuge under the bed-clothes from a skirmishing party of mosquitoes. At last one of them, gasping from heat, venturing to peep beyond the bulwarks, and by chance espied a fire-fly which had strayed into the room. "Arising, his companion with a punch, he said: 'Fergus, Fergus, faith it's no use. We might as well come out. Here's one of the little creatures searching furus wid a lantern.'"
"I wish, Sally," said Jonathan, "that you were locked in my arms, and that the key was lost."

HALL'S
VEGETABLE SICILIAN
HAIR
RENEWER

Nine years before the public, and no preparation for the hair has ever been produced equal to Hall's "Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer," and every honest dealer will say it gives the best satisfaction. It restores GRAY HAIR to its original color, eradicates and prevents dandruff, cures BALDNESS and promotes the growth of the hair. The gray and brassy by a few applications is changed to black and silky locks, and wayward hair will assume any shape the wearer desires. It is the cheapest HAIRDRESSING in the world, and its effects last longer, as it excites the glands to furnish the nutritive principle so necessary to the life of hair. It gives the hair that splendid appearance so much admired by all. By its tonic and stimulating properties it prevents the hair from falling out, and none need be without Nature's ornament, a good head of hair. It is the first real perfected remedy ever discovered for curing diseases of the hair, and it has never been equalled, and we assure the thousands who have used it, it is kept up to its original high standard. Our Treatise on the Hair mailed free; send for it.
