Thomas N lty Confesses Killing His Three Sisters and Brother.

Bad Blood Between the Elder Brother and Other Members of the Family -The Culprit Apparently Unconcerned.

Montreal, Nov. 8 .- Thomas Nulty, the elder brother of the four victims of the Rawdon murders, has made a full confession that he killed his three sisters and younger brother. Nulty is about 20 years old, and has worked in the lumber shanties. Quarrels have been frequent in the family, and there was bad blood between Nulty and his sisters. He returned to the house on the night after the murder, and claimed that he had not been near the house all day. He displayed the coolest nerve, surveying the bodies of his victims, which were laid out in the little farm house, and talking with the neighbors about the murder. Satur-day he attended the funeral of his victims, and sat throughout the church service perfectly unconcerned.

Detective McCaskill, who had strong suspicions that Tom Nulty was the guilty party, decided upon his arrest.

When he was constant. When he was arrested he made a full confession of the murder. There had always been bad blood between Tom and the two eldest sisters. They had quarreled, often dangerously, in the past, and more than once only prompt interference had prevented serious mischief being done. Once, when the second sister, who bears the reputation of having been a fearless fighter, had seized the axe, Tom had armed himself Chicago, Nov. 6.—Butter firm; cream- mer, and blows had been mutually with a lumberman's longhandled hamery, 15c to 23c; dairies, 12c to 20c. This should mean that about $9,000,000 have been placed in the hands of the farmers. The receipts at Fort William were 5,364,000 bushels during September and October, and the shipments during the same period were 4,308,000 bushels. HOMICIDAL HUNTERS.

The better class of Americans never did favor this line of acon, and latterly probably began to guides. There are always shooting acon, 1. I ash led of themselves. So frequent have these accidents become that two physicians of sporting and surgical inclinations have quit town practice and moved their offices to the woods, where

When the advocates of the ing causes they find all they want. Most of the visitors are busy men who have wrested vacations from labor at no little worry and sacrifice. Having a limited period at their disposal they regard every minute as precious and to be devoted to getting game. Now, add to these worries the change of diet and scenery, the exercise, the hard beds, the long trips, and the con-stant expectancy of finding game, and t is no wonder that their nerves become unsettled of game increases the mental tension. Finally the hunter is converted into a person without control of nerves or regular mental processes, whose one desire of life is to get a deer, and who sees in every moving object a target for his aim. He shoots because he has to shoot, and the same spirit which impels him to kill makes good his aim and sends the bullet straight. Several laws which sought to dc away with promiscuous shooting have been proposed and debated more or less seriously before the Maine Legislature, but the knowledge of having killed a fellow hunter is believed to be punishment enough for most men, and no enactment has stood the test of more than two seasons. The doctors who stand for the insanity theory advise all nervous and overworked men to stay away from the woods in open seasons. If they must go they should leave their rifles at home. Ben
