HURSDAY MORNING, DEC. 12, 1889. Will the Bast Down the West.

A morning contemporary comments on Lord Dufferin's speech at the banquet given o him recently by the London Chan commerce, in which he spoke of India as wheat-producing country and of the increase in the future, of her export of that artice of food. Undoubtedly that country, with its area and fertile soil, possesses great possibili-ties as a producer of wheat, which will be enhanced by an adequate system of irriga-tion and transport facilities, and there is much truth in the statement that the East may in time rival the West in the food markets of the Old World; but two impo erations must not be lost sight of In the East the chief article of consumption among the natives has been, in the past, rice; but, now that wheat is being grown, they are beginning to use that article also very largely as a staple of food. It is altogether to be expected that, as production increases, con-umption by the inhabitants of India will also sumption by the inhabitants of India will also increase especially should the rice crop be inadequate. In any estimate, therefore, of India's future export of wheat the home consumption of the 250 million inhabitants general sanitary welfare.

this consideration it must not b ericoked that, in the West, only the naller half of the North American continent has been developed. The great prairies of the Canadian Northwest, containing as they do an area eight times the size of the state of Ohio the finest wheat-growing land in the orld, yet await development. We possess world, yet await development. We possess in our own Canadian land the future granary of the British Empire to which the ntry must look for food to supply her eeming population, and the speedy develop-ment of our resources in that regard will ntry one of the greatest and the dudes of New York. Certainly not. Death does not end matter, force and motion. The constituent matter of the human lody, through death is merely refunded to the earth from which all the elements were derived, and co-ordinated into the human lorganism: What then does death end { It ends sensation and conscious suffering. It proves the limitation of human suffering in this life. No fact of human ex-perience can be adduced to show that there is any conscious suffering after death. If there was no such state as death there could be no conception of life. The one state pre-supposes the other. If there was no such thing as evil good would not be thinkable. The opposite of pleasure is pain, and the absence of heat. If man came into the world perfect there would be no in-centive to labor, and there would be no in-centive to labor, and there would be no in-centive to labor, so there are be no of development, or growth towards a higher life. life. When God's metaods are properly studied everything like caprice must be banished from our estimate of His perfection and wisdom. The man whorthinks honestly to know or understand the principle of things will not permit himself to harbor a thought that is derogatory to Infinite justice, wisdom, goodness and perfection. What offence committed in time could entail an eternity of suffering ! Such an idea is not only indicative of ignorance and injustice but it is only worthy of the savage. It is just as natural to die as to be born, and to the man worn out by age or sickness death is not so painful as birth to the infant. The average conception of death is a cruel and barbarous one. It impugns the benevolence of God when it assigns as a reason for it God's mode of punishing sin. In point of fact, death is a release from the suffering which attaches to sin or its conse-quences. To talk about death ending all is childish in the extreme, apart from the suf-fering incident to life. The conservation of energy and the indistructibility of matter, are truths which conclusively prove that death is merely change, produced by the continuity of motion. Human experience proves, if it proves anything, that suffering to the finite conscionenes is limited and finite. It establishes the fact that only man is barbarous and cruel. That God is wise, good and tolerant in relation to mars' every imperfection is manifest in the very institu-tion of death. Death is not a curse, but a Divine blessing.
