THE FOOT OF THE HORSE AND ITS MANAGEMENT.

HOW THE FOOT SHOULD BE TREATED.

Having, in our last, seen what the common practice of the farrier is in preparing and shoeing the foot...

From the time that the colt is a month old, his feet should receive the constant attention of his owner...

Development of the bones, joints and muscles of the limbs is materially influenced by the care bestowed on the feet...

It is essential that if the feet are neglected and allowed to grow long...

altering the general relation of one part of the limb to another.

Similar distortions take place when the foot is allowed to grow laterally...

It is turning to grow outward. In the hands of a skilful person, the foot and limbs are almost capable of being trained and guided into shape as in a sapling.

The importance of this attention in horses intended for speed, especially in trotting colts, cannot be over-estimated.

Speed is especially dependent on mechanism, and it is as essential to assist nature in the development of the requisite mechanical structure, as in the growth, form, and habits of the animal.

With proper attention to selection of sire and dam, ensure the transmission of the necessary temperament and inherited action, but we cannot do so without the maximum of perfection without attending to the proper developing of those parts which are essential, and none are more so than the feet and limbs.

Care must be taken that the foot does not grow too long, that it meets the ground with a level surface, and that any tendency to uneven growth be checked so that, when the time comes for the foot to be protected by an iron cover, the shoe, farrier shall find a foot of proper form, and bearing a proper relation to the limb of which it is the digital extremity.

To insure good feet in a young horse, he should not be pastured in low, soft, hilly sides and dry land, where the foot not only meets with resistance, but is subject to friction and wear, will develop a foot of better form and harder substance than we find in low wet pastures, where the foot is always moist, and is not exposed to the friction necessary to keep it down.

The foot, thus become large, wide and of a soft quality. The difference is seen in the medianized, hard hoof of the mountain brood horse, compared with the large, flat, soft feet of the prairie brood.

While the former has feet so hard as to enable him to perform long journeys on hard, rocky roads without shoes, the latter cannot open the door and go to the proprietor.

Linehan, have cows got front teeth on their upper jaws?

Linehan was running a skewer through a roast of beef, but he stopped looking up in astonishment, and said, 'What?'

'Have cows got front teeth on their upper jaws?'

'Cows?'

'Yes.'

'Got front teeth on their upper jaws?'

'Yes.'

'Upon my word I don't know.'

'You don't know?'

'No. You see I buy my beef by the quarter at the slaughter house, and don't have anything to do with the heads. But I can find out for you when I go over.'

'I wish you would.'

'So the milkman who closed the door, and rejoined his neighbor, and the two walked along without saying a word. A milkman was seen coming up the street, and the other, suspiciously, and asked him the question, as it is popularly supposed that milkmen are more or less of the same breed. The Van Buren street man cleared his throat and yelled, 'Hello! The milkman reined up and said:—'

'Got front teeth on their upper jaws?'

'Yes.'

Cow's Teeth.

INSURANCE STALENS THROUGH THE LAND.

A couple of third Ward citizens met each other on the sidewalk last Monday morning as they were starting for the places of business, and one of them, a man who resides on Van Buren street, asked the other, a Jackson-street man, if cows had any front teeth on their upper jaw.

The Jackson-street man was a little astonished at the question, as there had been nothing said about cows, but replied promptly:—

'Why of course they have front teeth on their upper jaw; how could they bite off grass if they hadn't?'

The Van Buren street man said:— 'It was not a question of logic, but a question of fact; and if the Jackson-street man did not know whether cows had front teeth on the upper jaw or not, he ought to say so, and not to ask you for your opinion; he said, 'I asked you if you knew.'

The Jackson-street man was a little nettled at this, and replied with some warmth. He said if he had a child three years old who would ask such a question as that, he should be afraid the child was an idiot.

'You would?'

'Then,' said the Van Buren-street man 'as it is such a simple question, of course you can tell me whether cows have front teeth on their upper jaw or whether they have not.'

'They have, eh?'

'Yes.'

'I'll bet you $10 they haven't,' said the Van Buren-street citizen, pulling out a roll of bills, and peeling off a couple of five and shaking them as his neighbor: 'Put up or shut up.'

'There is some infernal catch about this thing,' said the other, suspiciously; 'I might have known, too, the minute you asked me such an infernally idiotic question.'

'No catch at all about it,' replied the other; 'if cows have got front teeth on their upper jaws the $10 is yours. If they haven't the money is mine. Nothing could be fairer than that, could there?'

'But still the Jackson-street man hesitated. It was barely possible for cows to have any front teeth on their upper jaws. He remembered, then, that cows in biting off grass always throw their noses over backward, while horses nipped it off by jerking their noses under it. They were accustomed at how near he came to being victimized, but he did not like to come down. The two were then near the meat market at the corner of Jackson and Michigan streets, and the Jackson street man was sure that a butcher would know for sure whether or not cows had front teeth on their upper jaws; so he pushed open the door and said to the proprietor:—

'Linehan, have cows got front teeth on their upper jaws?'

Linehan was running a skewer through a roast of beef, but he stopped looking up in astonishment, and said, 'What?'
