The most natural thing for a young man full of activity is to seek some physical expression of this activity, especially those who are prevented from participating in muscular exercises. The young man who is held to his desk in the office all day, or he who is forced to bend over the work bench, or in other numerous ways is held from using the physical powers which are given him, chafes for active life. The Association recognizes this need of the young men and through its Physical Department provides a wholesome, and at the same time a sufficient outlet for this energy.
