Did I say "preferred"? Does not the opium-cater, in his lucid intervals, prefer thirst and languor and pain to the drug for which his diseased appetite cries out as the dying for breath, and the fever-scorched for water? Prefer it with mind and considence, if not with flesh and will? Jessie Kirke's will lived it, and it had borne her beyond the reach of temptation, and kept her there. But it did not hinder her from picturing Orrin pacing the portico, or, sitting in the parlor, awaiting her while she hid herself and her wretchedmong the willows. hard room, and in this she was ably seconded by Miss Sanford when the news of "that Miss Kirke's" engagement to Prof. Fordham was circulated in Hamilton circles. Jessie did not try at the very time when her doubts of him were at their height. Perhaps she felt the need of a safeguard for herself, or her conscience may have rebuked her that she had not defended himright or wrong—when attacked; or the suspicion of his unworthiness stimulated her to a strained generosity, a resolve to leave undone no part of the duty she owed while she was under contract to him. It had been long since her latest mention of the matter to Wyllys. He had replied to her queries by an injunction to continued confidence in Roy's integrity, which was construed by her into a charitable eva- and Mr. T. H. Purdom acted as Secsion. He would preserve intact his own love and esteem for the cousin he professed to revere, and blindly declined to undertake the examination of a record he more than feared contained entries that would lower his opinion of his hero, and damage the latter's character irretrievably with herself. Given this lever unappeased distrust in and latent resentment towards him, to whom her allegiance was due, and a less adroit diplomat than Orrin Wyllys might have so weakened the defenses of her love and constancy as to make her question whether surrender were not unavoidable-even desirable. She was tired, poor child, dismayed that her labor in "deep mid-ocean" was so tedious and severe, longing for rest in whatever port her worn heart might make. "I shall be tamed by the time you come home," she said, between tears and smiles, to Roy, at their parting, "Quite tame and old!"

"And I am," she thought, the jest recurring to her now. "Only life has also grown tame, and the world old

She had swung her hat upon her arm, and pushing back her hair with the palms that supported her fore-head, that the wind from the water might cool her beating temples, she rested her listless weight upon the frail railing. The woven twigs, once supple, were dry and rotten under the bark, and swayed outward with a sharp crack-a warning that came too late to save her. She caught, in falling, at the shattered panels left standing, and dragged only a handful of broken sticks with her into the creek. Coming to the surface after the plunge, she threw her grasping, struggling hands widely abroad, succeeded in seizing one of the upright supports of the bridge, and clung to it. Her head and shoulders were out of water. She was not actually drowning. In the strength imparted by this consciousness, she drew a long breath, and called for help.

A faint echo came back from the hills. The rest of the shout was lost in the spreading meadows or overpowered by the commingled sounds that were the voice of the early autumn day. She heard them more distinctly than when she had stood upon the bridge; the beat of the mill wheel, the rattle is $37. and rumble of the farm wagons, even the tread of the teams upon the oaken flooring; the now distant whistle of the quail, and, close beside her, the lapping of the creek among the sedges. She weighed her chances of speedy release from her unpleasant and dangerous situation before she raised another outcry. The stream was the feeder of the mill pond, and was made deeper and more sluggish by the dam, than half a mile farther down. She remembered to have heard that the depth just under the bridge was about feet. It might as well be a hundred if she were to relinquish her hold. She could do nothing but cling and wait until her calls should bring rescue or some chance passenger espy her. This was an unfrequented byway, and it might many hours before assistance came to her in the latter form. As to the other, the parsonage was the nearest dwelling. The mill was no farther off, but the united shriek of twenty drowning persons could not be heard above clatter of the machinery. Patsey was alone in the kitchen, her whole soul in her semi-weekly baking, and deaf to all outdoor noises excepting those from the poultry yard. There was no one else in the house unless Orrin had arrived. Jessie believed that she tasted the bitterness of death, as she imagined him, expectant of her coming, yet thoughtless of evil as the reason of her delay, taking a few restless turns upon the portico; then, wandering into the parlor, and standing, as he often did for several minutes together, gazing at the picture of the girl at the wishing well; opening the piano and running over some remembered air, or improvising dreamy, wistful

Grand Lodge Decides to Drop the Provision for Mileage.

Toronto, July 1 .- At yesterday's session of the grand lodge of Canada of the I. O. G. T., the question of annexing the two counties of Pontiac and Wright in Quebec to the grand lodge Canada (Ontario) was discussed Grand Chief Templar Lambly, of Quebec, spoke favorably on the proposition, and the district executive of Ottawa was requested to memorialize the executive of the grand lodge of Ontario and Quebec and to arrange for a settlement of the matter. The grand lodge decided, on the recommendation of the finance committee, to cease paying mileage to delegates to the grand lodge. The allowance for mileage has been made to delegates for several sessions, but from now on no remuneration will be given. Another important change made as a result of the discussion on this report was the reduction of the per capita tax from twelve cents to ten cents per quarter. It was de-cided to hold the next meeting at Ottawa. THE SUPREME LODGE. At the supreme lodge of the I. O. G. T., yesterday morning, it was decided that the method of electing grand lodge officers should be left to the various grand lodges. Bro. G. F. Cottrill presented a minority report from the committee on constitutions. This report calls for the division of the order into seven sectional bodies, namely: 1. United States. 2. Canada. 3. British Isles. 4. Australia. 5. South Africa. 6. Scandinavia. 7. German-speaking nations, with a supreme body limited in membership, made up of representatives from the national bodies. The matter evoked much discussion.

At the request of the President the Manager, Mr. Milne, read the following report of the Directors: To the Shareholders of the Northern Life Assurance Company of Canada: The Directors beg to submit their second annual report of the affairs of the Company, together with the duly audited balance sheet.

The result of the year's business shows a large percentage of progress. It will be seen that the insurance in force at the end of 1898 exceeded that of 1897 by about 150 per cent. At the end of 1898 the amount of the policies in force was $879,950, and the amount written $1,026,450, of which $665,950 was written during the year 1898.

The business transacted has been secured in the Province of Ontario, and the energies of the management have been directed towards securing as thorough an organization of the Province as can be effected. It is now intended to extend the business to other Provinces, and negotiations are in progress with that end in view. General agencies have been established in the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, which promise this Company a fair share of the business of these Provinces.

There are several facts worth noting in connection with the business of this Company which indicate that its management has continued to be cautious and progressive. The average risk is less than $1,200, and the average age of policyholders less than 30 years. More than half of the policies issued are on the Twenty Payment Life Plan, with the majority of the balance on the Ordinary Life and Endowment Plans. The average premium per 1,000

It is satisfactory to note, too, that no deaths have occurred among the Company's policyholders prior to the end of

into cash. The capital stock of the Company is now ample for all its requirements. The m of $58,900 was voluntarily paid in by shareholders during the year, on account of stock subscribed for, which makes the paid-up capital on the 31st day of December last amount to the sum of $199,825.

The Directors anticipate a steady increase of desirable business, the result for the expired portion of this year justifying such anticipation, the insurance written during that portion of the year being 43 per cent in excess of the insurance written during the same portion of last year, and should the business continue to increase in this Province, the Company will, when that secured in other Provinces is added, have as large a volume of business as is desirable. The Directors bear testimony to the efficiency of the Manager, Mr. John Milne, and to the valuable assistance in the field of Mr. W. E. Findlay, the Superintendent of Agencies, The Manager and the Superintendent of Agencies have worked with steady perseverance, securing good agents and establishing the Comparty in public confidence.

DAVID MILLS,

The President said that the policy adopted by the Directors in the management of the Company had been conservative. They had proceeded with great care, so as to avoid mistakes. It had not endeavored to do a large business, as they believed that the best interests of the Company and its stockholders would be served by a policy of caution, and by securing a business that was desirable. It was better to do a safe business at the outset, than a large one. The permanency and security of the company was now fairly established, and the aim of the Directors and the Executive Committee was to take care that every step taken was one favorable to the safety and permanency of the institu-tion. He believed that the course which had been taken was one which would enable them to reach a dividend-paying period earlier than if they had en-deavoted to push their business more energetically at a large expense. He was confident that had this been done at the outset, they would necessarily have trade many mistakes. They would have leen compelled to employ agents of whose fitness they could know nothing. As it is, they have been able to secure some well qualified men who have proved successful in securing business, and thus by a tentative proceeding, the Company has thrown proceeding, the Company has thrown away but little money upon persons unused to the business of insurance, and not naturally well fitted for the work. As the staff increases in humbers and efficiency, the business can be each yetr more energetically pushed. He had haplicit confidence in the future tain, Campbell Galbraith, Roy Gardiner, Willie Lyons, Ethel Moyer, Nelson Mystle Roberts, May Slade, Charlie Summers, Robbie Tufts, Chester Wilson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Beatrice Wilson, Beatrice Wilson, Robbie Willson, Beatrice Wilson, Beatrice Wi of the Company. They had but to continue this line of policy, and the foundations which had been laid must at an early day lead to that condition of success to which he thought they might confidently look forward. He moved the adoption of the report.

onded the adoption of the report. The Manager also presented a sup-plementary report of the business during the first five months of this year, comparing it with the business during the same period of last year. This report shows that the volume of business has increased over 43 per cent. The cash income has more than doubled, while the expenses have increased only about 19 per cent.

Addresses commenting upon the satisfactory condition of the affairs of the Company were made by Messrs. Wilson, Stevens, Purdom, Leys, Balfour and Jenkins, and all were satisfied with the hopeful outlook for the future. The report was unanimously adopt-

BRILLIANT WEDDING AT THORNDALE

Wisconsin Professor Weds Popular High School Teacher-Other Happy Events.

"Ellanvannin," the residence of Mr. Wm. McCutcheon, Thorndale, on June 29, was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when his eldest daughter, Charlotte, was united in marriage to Dr. Arthur Beatty, youngest son of Squire Beatty, Kirkston. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. A. Graham, B.A. The bride, who looked charming, was attired in an ivory duchesse satin gown, looped with lilies of the valley in chiffon, and carried a shower bouquet of white bridal roses. The bride wore no ornaments. except a sunburst of pearls, which fastened her bridal veil, and was the gift of the groom. The bridesmaid was her sister Maude, who wore a dress of Nile green silk, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations, while her sister Leona was flower girl, and wore a white muslin frock with pink sash. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was an opal ring and to the flower girl a gold bracelet. The groom was supported by Dr. MacVannel, of New York. The bride, leaning on the arm of her father, entered the parlor to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, played by Mrs. J. Mossip. The rooms were tastefully decorated with flowers for the occasion. After congratulations the guests repaired to the dining-room, where a recherche dejeuner awalted them. The happy couple left at 4 o'clock, en Sute for Madison, Wis., their future home, where Dr. Beatty has been a lecture, in the State University for some years. The bride's going-away gown was blue

Blenheim cloth over blue silk. The bride, who is an undergraduate of Toronto University, and a most successful high school teacher, had a number of her co-workers present at number of her co-workers present at her marriage. A unique feature of the occasion was the fact that the bride, groom, bridesmaid and groomsman, as well as the officiating minister were all ex-pupils of Principal Martin, St. Marys C. I. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts, among which was a handsome silver tea service, presented by the pupils of the Strathroy C. The Epworth League Reading Circle, of which she was president, gave her a case of silver tea spoons, while her Sunday school class gave a beautiful souvenir spoon; from Mr. and Mrs. George W. Logan, silver knives and forks; Mr. and Mrs. E. J. MacRoberts, sterling silver sugar and cream set on stand, also sterling silver berry spoon. The bride also received an elegant silver tea service, the gift of Mr. Jas. Beatty, brother of the groom. The gift of the bride's father was a piano.
