Hops.—The bitter taste of the hop seems as unpalatable to our farmers, as salt to the Californians. But hop beer improves on acquaintance like the muskmelon. I wish to see every garden ornamented with a few hills of them. The hills should be 7 feet apart, having two roots of the last year's growth in a hill, and one half of the ground may be occupied for vegetables the first year. The second year place one, two, or three poles 14 feet long, to a hill, and carefully tie 2 aprons to a pole. When the vine has grown up, and its top is seen waving above the top of the pole, clip the end of it off. They require as faithful hoeing and manuring as corn. They are no friends to weeds.

Good Coffee of Rye.—Wash the rye clean; boil it till soft; but take care that the kernels do not burst. Then dry it, and burn it like coffee; grind it and it is fit for use. It may be infused and boiled in the usual way; but if coffee is required equal to Mocha, half of this powder added to an equal quantity of real coffee gives a beverage fit for the Grand Turk.
