have been going on at the same time with most gratifying success. Changes in crop rotation, treatment of stable manure with simple and abundant chemical elements to add to its efficiency, green manuring, liming, etc., have all had their place in this work and all have been helpful, so that when the war shall end and peace shall come, Germany must sell potash at fair prices if she expects to find a market for it in the fertilizer industry.

THE PRICE OF SHOES
(Argonaut.)
It is reasonable enough that there should be an increase in the price of shoes, but why so large an increase?
If the present tendencies continue we shall have to raise our feet to the level of the Parisian aristocracy. The shoes of Paris were said to paint their legs to resemble socks. There seems to be no scarcity of leather if one may judge from the vast display of that useful article on the legs of chauffeurs and in the form of belts around the waists of young women who amuse themselves by pretending to be soldiers and who run around the street with a look of pre-not only agriculture but the production of war material was demanding a larger supply than ever before. The makers of war turned to the potash industry for that new and immediate source of potash he found and developed instantly merely making bullets for the Allies for the Hun must be beaten by the expense what it might. It being America's mission to supply the world with the much of the supply developed in the early years of the war—and it should be said that the American chemist possessing a large amount of potash hand—and was used by fertilizer makers, and to a small extent at least the farmer continued to plant his seeds in soil not wholly devoid of this supposedly indispensable element. But when America joined the Kaiser's enemies and turned her attention to making explosives for her own soldiers to use instead of merely making bullets for the Allies to shoot, there soon was no potash for any purpose but to meet the insatiable demands of the military establishment.

For two years potash had been too expensive to allow more than 1 or 2 per cent of it to be used for fertilizer, and now even that minimum must be given up. As soon as potash became scarce and dear, the department of agriculture and the department of agriculture experiment stations began work looking to the production of at least normal crops with fertilizers innocent of that German commodity. The first season's efforts were attended with only moderate success, but the research went on and non-potash fertilizers were applied to all staple crops the next year with more encouraging results. Garden vegetables, legumes, cotton, cereals, orchard fruits and berries have been found to respond satisfactorily. In many instances no diminution of output has been apparent, and in others it has been so slight as not to represent the cost of potash, even in normal times.

Other experiments besides the mere omission of potash from the fertilizer
