Po J FORGET PHEE. BY CAPTAIN D. MACNAGHTEN .

Do I forget thee?-but I may When ocean waves forget to roll; Or magnet-steel to point the way Unerring to the genial pole : I may forget thee when the thorn Forgets to gnard the rose's tree; When scorned love forgets the scorn, Or his sweet trade the busy bee : I may, indeed, forget thee-when The bird forgets his wood notes wild, The waning moon to wax again, The mother's heart her only child.

Do I forget thee ?-does the sun Forget to yield its golden light? Do Time's small sands forget to run, Or stars to gem the cloudless night? Do shipwreck'd men forget the storm, 2 Though oft again its risks they brave; Or does the heart forget the form Which its first thrill of passion gave? Does dire revenge forget to wreak In deadly curse when comes the hour; Or does the conscious maiden's cheek Forget to own love's heartfelt power.

Do I forget thee ?- when the snow In arctic lands forgets to Tall; When free-born souls forget to throw Defiance to a despot's thrall; When lips forget their first love-kiss, Albeit the love it sealed may die, And faithful hearts, o'er days of bliss For ever gone, forget to sigh ;-All that in thee I now adore, Which in thy form and mind have met
