GENERAL NEWS AND NOTES

Russia is adding to the strength of her artillery force.

Martin Farquhar Tupper, the poet, is dead at the age of 79.

The New Word.

DUPEPSIA is derived from the Greek, δυς and πεπτω a condition of perfect digestion. This condition is always attained by those who use Burdock Blood Bitters, the only guaranteed medicine for all forms of dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, rheumatism, scrofula and all blood diseases.

The Russian Government has abolished the Provincial Council of Nobles in the Baltic provinces and substituted the popular assembly.

Not Only For Man.

I CAN say that your Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best thing I ever saw for croup, coughs, cuts, or burns, and it is good for man or beast. MISS E. M. HOPKINS, Claremont, Ont. Yellow Oil cures rheumatism, neuralgia and all pain.

The French Senate has rejected an amendment prohibiting the employment of women in factories at night.

A Big Nugget

OF gold may make a man rich, but it cannot make him healthy. If afflicted with any form of dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, scrofula, bad blood, kidney complaint or skin disease, the remedy that will make you well is Burdock Blood Bitters. It is the best blood cleanser known.

An official denial is given of the report that Russia and Turkey were negotiating the cession of Armenia to the former.

Valuable to Know.

CONSUMPTION may be more easily prevented than cured. The irritating and harassing cough will be greatly relieved by the use of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam that cures coughs, colds, bronchitis and pulmonary troubles.

Mr. Redmond, editor of the Waterford (Ireland) News, has been sentenced to three month's imprisonment for intimidation.

A Plain Statement.

ALL poisonous waste, and worn out matter ought to escape from the system through the secretions of the bowels, kidneys and skin. B. B. B. cleanses, opens and regulates these natural outlets for the removal of disease.

Mr. Gladstone estimates that if a general election were to be held now, the Home Rulers would obtain a majority of 109 in Parliament.

A Night Alarm.

I AWOKE last night to find my little boy to bed with croup that he could hardly breathe. Set on giving him some Hagyard's Yellow Oil on sugar, and rubbing his chest, throat and back with it also, he soon was sleeping quietly and awoke next morning completely cured.
JOHN ELLIOT, Eglinton, Ont.

The Anti-Slavery Conference at Brussels is discussing a proposal to establish military stations in the interior of Africa, equipped with forces strong enough to cope with the slave-hunters.

Your Life in Danger.

Take time by the forelock ere that rasping, hacky cough of yours carries you where so many Consumptives have preceded you; lose no time, but procure a bottle of the rational remedy for Lung and Bronchial Diseases, Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It will cure you. Sold by all Druggists, at 50c. and $1.00.

A PROMINENT Character in the Detective Story, The Diamond Button, is a Reporter named BRYAN. The young gentleman shown in the above initial design is not Mr. Bryan—but ANOTHER prominent character in this, as well as in most other stories.

OUR ADVICE IS: Read "The Diamond Button."

WHEN I AM DEAD.

When I am dead, my dearest,
Sing no sad songs for me;
Plant thou no roses at my head,
Nor shady cypress tree;
Be the green grass above me
With showers and dewdrops wet;
And if thou wilt, remember,
And if thou wilt, forget.

I shall not see the shadows,
I shall not feel the rain;
I shall not hear the nightingale
Sing on as if in pain;
And dreaming through the twilight
That doth not rise nor set,
Haply I may remember,
And haply may forget.
—Christian Rossetti.

THE GENI OF THE MINE.

The claimant to peculiar respect on the score of sanctity of life varies in various lands, or, for that matter, in any habitat. He may be a hypocrite, or a fanatic, deceiver or dupe—a man of genuine worth—though, perhaps, for reasons he would scout—or a loafer winning, on acquaintance, deserved contempt. I shall put my old friend, Moung Ko, without a second's hesitation, in an upper grade of "holy men."

He walked consciously on high levels of his profession. Not a phoonghie in all Burmah was better versed in the lore, not merely of the pagoda, but of nature and of life. His fame for charity was just, and I at least have never been able, since the occurrence of the events I propose to relate, to hold that the wild hill men of Anapoora were wholly mistaken in calling Moung Ko a seer as well as a priest. I shall have to show that he, too, had failed where, verily, popes have failed. And it may be that the weird gift, never a joy to its possessor, was linked in hidden depths with the romance of a strange career and the pain of a long fight for repentance.

To be coherent, and even to compass conciseness, it is generally well to begin at the beginning. Moreover, my first meeting with Moung Ko is an integral part of my tale. A hint was offered even then which I was slow to seize, but which later was bathed in revealing light. The existence of the cipher must be divined before an interpretation can be supplied.

I had penetrated a new district and encountered an accident. A luckless slip on the shelving ledge of a remote gorge had nearly sent me to my doom. I escaped through the circumstance that the thick scrub of the wilderness straggled down the cliff side to wherever there was a layer of earth to support vegetation. For long hours I remained in a precarious situation, lodged, with a sprained ankle, amongst brambles; above me, frowning rocks; beneath me, the abyss. The outlook was black. If I stirred, the odds were that I should go over the brink and be dashed to pieces; if I stayed where I was, I must starve. Again—and I had plenty of space to think the thing through—if I shouted myself hoarse nobody was likely to come; and if the improbable became a fact, and there was a response, I had no insurance that aid and not a cruel thrust would be the result. It was all uncertain whether friends or enemies were in the neighborhood.

In the retrospect it seems to me that my energies suddenly flagged and that I passed into a stupor of despair. Surely there was excuse. But as the weary day wore on my faculties regained their edge. I determined to have a cast for dear life. With much of the gambler's recklessness and fever I cried aloud at intervals a full score of times. The silence remained unbroken. But a queer portent perplexed my mind. From where I was lying the opposite bend of the valley was distinctly in view, and twice across the line of vision flitted a grotesque, undersized figure in a costume certainly not known to me as favored by any Burman, Shan or Karen, male or female. The draperies were flowing and dark, scarcely distinguishable from the color of the rocks. I shivered involuntarily. Did the creature belong to the realm of honest, practical existence? Or was I delirious? I pinched myself, as those do who cannot be sure if they are awake or dreaming. The dwarfish apparition did not vanish. It went on to the head of the defile and was finally lost in the shadows of the teak trees. Another idea, belonging to a state of weakness, came to me. Was it a warning that I must expect the worst?

"Softly, friend; have courage. Move not. I will help you."

Sweeter words I never heard spoken in any vernacular than those I thus translate. I knew their meaning, for I had picked up not a little of the native tongue. They were whispered literally into my ear. The new comer had approached so silently that there was danger even in his announcement of kindly purpose.

The sharp surprise made me start. I tried to look the speaker in the face, and, in the effort, swayed towards the precipice. A swarthy, sinewy hand gripped me and held me back.

"Did I not say 'softly,' friend?" expostulated the stranger, with gentle reproach in his accents.

"Thanks," I answered; "but my ankle is twisted. How will you get me out of this?"

Moung Ko was not a man of unnecessary words. For reply he drew aside, with his arm, a bush immediately to my right. A natural recess was disclosed, and, as there was light beyond, I surmised the existence of a tunnel or passage. It was doubtless in this way that he had reached my ledge. And now he proved the wonderful muscular strength that resides in the Burman frame. Stretching himself on the uneven ground he grasped with one arm a buttress of rock, and, with the other, he lent me a support which was entirely adequate for my deliverance. The pain of the injured limb made me wince at every movement; but I set my teeth together, and, trusting to the directions acted rather than uttered, I was released from my position of peril.

Then I saw that I owed my safety to a phoonghie or priest. I have already indicated my impression of Moung Ko's character. I repeat that he was genuine in spite of all. In person he was short, stoutly built, and with features wrinkled, sallow and inscrutable. He was old; but I fancy did not count nearly as many years as his looks gave him credit for, and as the truculent tribes with whom he had settled believed.

"You must stay with me. Can you walk at all—thus, leaning on my shoulder, using my staff?"

And Moung Ko—whose name I had ascertained—led me slowly down the winding passage. Was his monastery near, I wondered? I had seen no signs of such an edifice as I entered the gorge. But it proved unnecessary to put the question into words. There was a cunningly hidden opening in the rock wall. We squeezed through, and within was a wide and airy cave—evidently a place of habitation. Nature had shaped its walls and stretched its roof, but art had transformed the rude mountain eyrie into a palatial hall. Evidences of wealth were on every side. The finest Oriental fabrics were the garniture of shelving floor and lofty recess. Soft rugs were here in bewildering profusion, and furniture and pieces of bric-a-brac that would have fetched fabulous sums in Wardour street. My eyes caught also the unmistakable gleam of the precious metals.

It was a riddle at first where the subdued light came from, for window there was none. But at last I made the discovery that at one end of the great chamber was a long gallery, communicating, doubtless, with the outside world amidst the inaccessible heights of the cliff. This admitted both air and light; sunshine could be but a brief visitant.

I am weaving together the results of extended and leisurely examination. At the instant of introduction I was too astonished to observe many details. The amazement mirrored inevitably upon my countenance was noticed.

"This is a poor wanderer's occasional home. Its existence is a secret which you will not betray," Moung Ko said. "You are the first stranger I have had the honor to welcome here; and when you are strong enough to go with me down the valley to the monastery I shall ask that you keep strict silence as to where you have been. You can say that you have rested in a cave man's haunt. It will be true. I am sure my secret is safe."

The calm expression of complete certainty struck me as singular.

"I am flattered by your faith in my gratitude, and I hope and believe that it is not misplaced," I answered; "but is there not a risk? I may disappoint you by some unguarded word. Do you not fear it?"

I was smiling; but it was no smile that came on Moung Ko's face. A light was in the deep set, neutral tinted eyes that touched my spirit almost to awe.

"No, I do not," Moung Ko replied, in deep, resonant tones. "It is on the scroll of the future that I shall not suffer through you. My own people—they will mete out the punishment that has tarried so long. But what am I saying? Yes, I can read the language of the face. I know that I may trust you."

The light was gone, and I could have fancied that I had not really heard those words of weird fate which, nevertheless, I was to remember after many days.

While we talked Moung Ko was deftly preparing and applying a cool compress to the swollen joint. It was patent that he possessed not a little surgical skill.

Suddenly I spoke of the strange figure I had seen while waiting for the fiat of fate; and I surely felt Moung Ko's fingers tremble. His head was bent down, and this was my one warning of the phoonghie's uneasiness. His reply was evasive.

"There is no village in that direction; it is all waste and barren; there are no paths, either. The hill folk talk like you of things that it is ill to see. They are cowards. But I say that bushes take wonderful shapes; and sometimes they move in the wind."

It sounded like satire, and Moung Ko was a clever diplomatist. He had nearly persuaded me that I was the victim of a delusion. A man recovering from a swoon may easily be cheated by shadows. I let the subject drop. It occurred to me later that Moung Ko was relieved to find that I did not insist on the reality of the experience.

I had fallen into capital hands. If a tie of kinship or creed had existed, I could not have been better cared for. And at the end of a week I was able to move gingerly about with a crutch. My host now suggested migration to a zyat, or hostelry for travelers, hard by his pagoda, in a village of the lower plateau. I was perfectly willing to move. It would give me opportunities for becoming acquainted with the inhabitants of the district and with local customs and characteristics that were hitherto only matters of hearsay.

The man who had laid me under so great an obligation was more and more a marvel and a mystery. His life, as gradually disclosed, seemed full of contradictions. It was abundantly clear that he was held in extreme reverence by the brethren of his order as well as by the villagers. But, with innate skepticism, I declined to think that there was anything in his common fame as a seer. Still, he accepted the homage, and it was equally hard to believe him an impostor.

Your vulgar trickster does not devote himself to the wants of a poor and primitive people as Moung Ko did. Without fee or reward, he was always at their service. He was strict—none more so, I learned—in fulfillment of the ritual of the pagoda. Yet, by the law, binding on phoonghies, he could possess no personal property; and I had seen what I had seen. Perhaps I lingered in the district longer than I should otherwise have done because I wanted to fit an answer to my enigma.

Tragic circumstances supplied it. The tribesmen of Upper Anapoora were turbulent and headstrong, and it was one of Moung Ko's most difficult and delicate tasks to maintain peace.

"There has always been a strife between mountain and plain. Two races touch in these hills," he said. "The feud will break out afresh one day in spite of me. Yes, and soon. I have heard the sound of the dismal wind—of the war wind—sighing in the air where no forest trees are. It will come, and then the vengeance falls and I go."

The sad eyes were gazing through the veil we all seek to pierce but may not. Moung Ko was in bodily contemplation of issues that as yet were below the horizon of his fellows.

I frowned at myself, for again I was conscious of a certain eerie impression, produced in defiance of reason, upon my mind. And, to an outsider's judgment, the sky had no clouds.

Although I was a guest, and not a prisoner, and although Moung Ko had expressly stated that he trusted me, it was a notion that grew in strength as the days went by that I was watched, and that Moung Ko preferred that I should not wander far afield.

Call it ingratitude, or the mere spirit of contrariness and self assertion, as you please, the fact remains that, one fine morning, I secreted my revolver and a
