THE END OF THE WAR.
The war is over and the whole civilized world sighs with relief and thankfulness not only that the awful orgy has come to an end but that it has ended without involving other nations. For no day since the beginning of the struggle has been without its danger of a general melee and at times the situation has been shiveringly acute. But for the vision of Britain behind Japan, armed and ready to strike at the first intimation of unfriendliness to her ally, it is almost certain that something would have happened to widen the conflict, perhaps to the dimensions of a world war.

Brief though the fight has been, as wars go, few conflicts of history have been so destructive to life and treasure, so distinguished by great stages and battles by land and sea and few have been more revolutionary in their results. One year and six months and twenty-one days, scarcely a day without its stirring incident, have sufficed for the raising of a little known and apparently insignificant nation to the rank of a world power, for the humbling to earth of one of the greatest nations on earth and for the most dangerous naval battle and the greatest land battle ever recorded since men first learned the art of murder.

Japan a year and a half ago was a nation of little note occupying a country of small size and small natural wealth, with no prospect of territorial expansion and apparently in imminent danger of extinction under the paw of the advancing Bear. Today she is the dominant power in that portion of the globe which for the next century will be the centre of world politics; and has unlimited possibilities of expansion and development—possibilities and has unlimited possibilities of many nations are aghast at the prospect.

Eighteen months ago Russia was the most aggressive nation in Europe. The equable East lay almost in her grasp; Japan seemed a mere fly in her path and world waited fearfully for her next move. Today she is humiliated and discredited. Her progress Eastward—the slow work of generations—has been arrested and she has been hurried back to wait growlingly for more generations before another advance in that direction is possible, if it is ever possible.

That is the net result of the slaughter and maiming of hundreds of thousands of brave men and the expenditure of billions of dollars in the war which ended yesterday.

In compensation for this the Russian people have the knowledge that the war has advanced them many steps on the road toward political freedom, while the Russian government may extract some satisfaction from the fact that but for the ability and cunning of their peace envoys who have been so far from the Japanese plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth the result might have been even worse.

For Russia has undoubtedly got the better of the peace negotiations and has prevented Japan from enforcing some important demands which the result of the fighting justified her in making. The Japanese envoys came to the conference with an unbroken succession of victories at their back and the practical certainty that a continuation of the war meant more such victories. From this platform they nominated the conditions upon which they would make peace—reimbursement for the cost of the war; cession of Sakhalin Island; Russian evacuation of Manchuria and surrender of the Liao Tung peninsula with Port Arthur and Daini; recognition of Japan's protectorate over Korea; surrender of interned Russian war ships; cession to Japan of the branch of the trans-Siberian railway below Harbin; mutual recognition of the "open door" in China; grant of fishing rights to Japan off the Siberian coast and finally a limitation of the naval strength of Russia in Far Eastern waters.

From the other side of the scale the Russian envoys pointed to the terms which they considered fair and agreed to them. But upon any point where concession meant an open admission of defeat, confession to the world that if the war were renewed Russia expected the Japanese success to continue, Witte and Rosen stood firm. What Japan had already won by force of arms she could keep, as was her right, but nothing based on the future prospects would be granted, and above all no indemnity, under any guise, would be paid.

Then the Japanese, cornered as cleverly as was Kuroptkin at Mukden, threw up their hands and practically submitted to the Russians on every disputed point. They had no alternative except the continuance of the war as a fight for tribute.

So there is some foundation for Witte's little boast, "We have had our little Yangtsé and Mukden and Tsushima; Japan has her Portsmouth."

But as it is Japan got all she was fighting for, and more. Port Arthur, twice captured, is one of her greatest defences instead of her chief menace. Korea is her province and Manchuria her colony, greatly needed to relieve the pressure of her teeming population. Daini, the port built by the Russian government, at enormous expenditure, is now her possession, and also the railway leading thence, or as much of it as Oyama's troops have passed over. She has secured rich fishing rights in Siberian waters and has wrested from Russia the better half of Sakhalin Island, at the same time removing all menace in that direction by inducing Russia to agree to the neutralization of the whole island from a military standpoint. By forcing from Russia the long delayed recognition of the "open door" policy for Far Eastern trade she has opened a leading to boundless trade development for herself. And though Russia boasts of evading the indemnity demands Japan will have the comfort of receiving from the Czar full payment for the travelling expenses and board of all Russian prisoners taken during the war. As for the results of the conference, while it may be soothing to Russian pride it can have no counter effect on the policy of the Russian government. If her surrender was not all magnanimity—and it came a little too late for that—at least it was not inspired by any fear or any lack of confidence in the result of the war, however prolonged. She had won what she chiefly desired and practically all that she could hope for. What the nation needs now is peace and a chance to grow into its new clothes and the sacrifice she has had to make to reach this end is so trivial beside her glorious war record and her splendid conquests that history will probably forget all about it.

The next decade will be even more important to Japan than the last. She has fought her way to world power, but can she hold that position in the conflicts of peace time? Ability to fight cannot maintain a nation in the front ranks among the powers. Unless Japan can show equal superiority in the arts of peace she will cut as sorry a figure in the world as a prize fighter among keen business men. But few will doubt her ability to make good. Indeed there is strong ground for fear that with the greatest market of the world at her door, her progress in trade and especially in manufacturing will menace the prosperity of the nations who now monopolize the trade of the Orient.

Undoubtedly history will give to President Roosevelt a large place in its record of the close of this great war. Not only was his the hand that arrested the combatants and made the peace conference possible, but, if contemporary historians can be believed, only his intervention prevented a rupture of negotiations before yesterday's glad consummation was reached. While he was the only ruler so situated that he could take such action disinterestedly he has certainly taken good advantage of his position and done the world valuable service, at the same time enlarging the place of the United States in world politics.

But the man of the hour is M. Witte. One of the strongest voices against the war he was called in to remedy as far as possible the blunders of those who had forced the conflict with its humiliating outcome. And he has accomplished more than that to hope. What ever Kuroptkin and his lieutenants have done for the discredit of Russia's military prowess he has shown the world that Russia is still a force and has lost none of its skill in diplomacy.

Had the palm of victory in the peace conference gone to Baron Komura, he would still have been outdone at home by Oyama and Togo and Kuroki and Nogai and Kamimura and the others to whom national honor is due for triumphs on land and sea. But for the Russians Witte is the only man who has accomplished anything for his country since the war began. There should await him at home all acclamation and honor and reward. But, his home being Russia, he can consider himself lucky if he escapes Siberia.

THE DEAR OLD DAYS.
Gimme back the dear old days—all the boys in line—
"Boy stood on the burnin' deck," an' "Bingen on the Rhine!"
"Twas midnight; in his guarded tent—we spoke it high and low,
While Mary trotted out that lamb "whose fleece was white as snow!"
Gimme back the dear old days that Mem'ry loves to keep,
With "a light and a fearful night—there's danger on the deep!"
The old-time awkward gestures—the jerk meant for a bow—
"We cannot dance, my dear, should not ring," but Lord, it's ringing now!

Gimme back the dear old days—the pathway through the dells
To the schoolhouse in the blossoms,
The sound of far-off bells
"Tinkling" across the meadows; the song of the bird 'an' brook;
The old-time dictionary, an' the blue-back spellin' book!

Gone, like a dream forever!—A city's hid the place
Where stood the old log schoolhouse; an' no familiar face
Is smilin' there in welcome beneath a mornin' sky—
There's a bridge across the river; an' we've crossed, an' said "Good-bye!"
—Atlantic Constitution.

W. TREMAINE CARD
Thomas M. Byrnes of New York is at the Royal. Although he is not the famous ex-police inspector of the same name, yet it is somewhat of a coincidence that he resides on the same street in New York, and is also an inspector, but of buildings and not policemen. Mr. Byrnes is well acquainted with his celebrated namesake and says he often receives mail which the author of Criminals I Have Met is entitled to. Mr. Byrnes has been on a pleasure trip through the provinces.

RECENT DEATHS.
Mrs. Thomas Beville died yesterday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. Bell, at the age of 83 years. She had been in poor health for the last two years and for the past two months was confined to her bed. Older citizens will remember her husband, who conducted a business in the market some years ago. Besides the daughter, with whom she lived, another daughter, Mrs. Thomas McFarland—and one son, Joseph Beville, with T. McAvity & Sons, survive.

The death of Frederick B. Puddington occurred yesterday after a short illness at his residence, 3 Pine street. Mr. Puddington was the second son of the late Edwin T. W. Puddington. He was unmarried and is survived by his mother, Mrs. Emily S. Puddington, and two brothers, Dr. Herbert Puddington, of Grand Falls, and Frank Puddington of this city.
