CARUSO'S ACCUSER TELLS HER STORY

Husband Who Is Ball Player Wanted to Go to Hotel and Punch the Tenor

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The Evening World says today that the woman who gave her name as Hannah Graham and who failed to appear in the police court to press the charge which she made against Caruso, the Italian tenor, has been found. She is Mrs. Stanhope, the wife of Adam Stanhope, a baseball player, the World says. It quotes Mrs. Stanhope as saying that there is no question but what the insult offered by Caruso was intentional. She said she did not know at the time that the man was Caruso. She did not desire to make any complaint, but finally did so because Policeman Cain said that the man had insulted other women that day and had wanted to lock him up.

Mrs. Stanhope denied ever having seen Cain before the time he asked her to make the complaint against the singer. Finally after repeated requests to do so she consented to accompany the officer and the prisoner to the police station. When she reached there a man who was pointed out to her as Police Captain Stephenson told her, she declares, that she need not give her real name. "I guess we have this man dead to rights," she quoted the captain as having said to her, "and you need not come to court."

When asked why she did not write a letter to the magistrate, Baker, who took the complaint, she replied, "I was afraid. After I told my husband he acted like a madman. He wanted to go to the Hotel Savoy and punch the tenor. Gus Meenan, his friend, had a hard time holding him in check, but both Mr. and Mrs. Meenan finally persuaded him to let the court punish Caruso."

Mrs. Stanhope said she went to the Central Park zoo with the little son of Leonard Bronner. She had been employed as a governess in Mr. Bronner's home before her marriage. "It was in the monkey house that I first saw Caruso," she said. "I did not know that the foreign looking man was Caruso at the time. He lies when he says that I attracted to him when I felt something heavy pressing on my right shoulder, it was the man's elbow, and as I supposed it was by accident, I walked away from him."

"The man followed me across the building. I was looking into a cage where there was but one monkey, when I felt the knuckles of a hand rub against me. I turned. It was the foreign looking man, standing close. There was no mistake about the insult being intended."

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Enrico Caruso was given a cordial welcome to-night when he appeared a few moments after the curtain had risen on La Boheme at the Metropolitan Opera House. The only suggestion of disapproval of the tenor was a little hissing from different parts of the house. After a few seconds this was hushed. The applause lasted several minutes, being greatest in the galleries and balconies, where many French ladies were seated. After his first solo Caruso bowed his acknowledgments. Police guards all the exits and the tenor once throughout the house and in the wings of the stage.

HE SHOT THE GIRL WHO SCORNE HIM

Put a Bullet in Her Heart
When She Called Him 'Pig'

And Spat in His Face—Little Joe, the Tailor, Nursed a Grudge Which Grew Out of Tonietta's Treatment

(N. Y. Sun.)

For a long time now little Joe the factory hand has taken his place early each morning at Heller & Co., on the fourth floor loft at 67 Spring street, knowing that every time he looked up from his work he would see just across the table from him the black eyes of Tonietta Macdoodle, flashing blacker looks at him, or what hurt more, Tonietta's face distorted into diabolical grimaces. When Joe's glance dropped quickly to the work again he would hear, even above the irritating rattle of the machine, whisperings among the girl operators on the other side of the long table and perhaps a shrill giggle.

Just what was back of Tonietta's dislike for Joe could not be learned yesterday, because Tonietta had been shot through the heart by Joe at the luncheon hour and Joe had been locked in the Tombs charged with her murder.

She spit in his face when I was washing my hands at the sink," explained the young Sicilian to Coroner Shraley, "and so I shot her dead. Every day she teased me and made faces across the table, and so I shot her dead." He spoke as though the girl's death merely had brought to an end the indignities he had received for many months and that now he would have peace.

When Joe first came to the factory he had a quite different opinion of Tonietta. In the beginning when he looked up from the sewing machine it was to glance with pleasure at the black eyes opposite, and although Tonietta didn't always smile back at him she at least did not make the irritating grimaces. Joe tried to show her little attentions during the short lull in the mad rattle of the machines at noontime and although he received little encouragement he continued the attentions.

It was not until Vincenzo Lavori came to work at Heller's a few months ago that the grimaces began. Then Tonietta's infrequent smiles for Joe stopped altogether, and when Joe sought the girl at the lunch hour he would find her seated in a corner chatting away and laughing with Vincenzo. When he persisted in trying to join the group one rolled together some shreds of cloth and threw the ball across the table so that it struck the black pompadour of Tonietta. "Tore!" snapped Tonietta angrily to big Joe, and that one word had much to do with her death yesterday. The girl who had heard Tonietta call Joe a pig giggled uproariously. Vincenzo guffawed with loud appreciation. Tonietta, pleased with the appreciation with which the epithet was met, began to use it frequently during the long hot afternoons, and the giggles increased across the table. Instead of clearing his troubled brain with some frothy ale Joe would sit at the corner of the left and brood. Then when the nerve racking machines began the long afternoon grind again he would bend over his work till his shoulders pained, and when he raised his head he was met with grimaces and the giggles. Joe bought a revolver.

"This morning it was worse and worse," said an Italian after he had killed Tonietta yesterday. "At noon I was washing my hands at the sink. Somebody came up behind me and bumped into me. When I straightened up and turned around, with a sharp word there was Tonietta, and behind her was Vincenzo Lavori. 'Pore! Pig, pig, pig!' cried Tonietta, and she spit in my face. So I shot her."

They say in the factory that as the second shot was fired at Tonietta her sweetheart, Vincenzo, sprang upon Joe and struck the murderer upon the head with a bar of iron. Joe and Vincenzo went down together, and as they fought on the floor there were two more shots and Vincenzo cried out in pain. Joe was turning the revolver upon himself now when his arm was grasped by an operator, Benjamin Rosenblatt, who prevented Joe from killing himself.

The first screams of fright from the sixty or more girl operators in the room gave way to cries of rage and the operators rushed upon Joe. With face covered with blood from the blow of the iron bar, Joe dragged himself from the tangle caused by the dead body of Tonietta and the wounded Vincenzo, and got to his feet and braced himself against the sink for protection. Some of the frantic girls had started in a panic for the long iron bars began to beat Joe savagely when Foreman Clay ran into the room and dispersed the fighters. In the meantime the bookkeeper had telephoned, as soon as he heard the uproar, to Police Headquarters.

It took the combined efforts of Foreman Von Desele and Patrolman Falvey to pull Joe through the howling mob of men and girls in the loft and take him down to the Mulberry street police station. Through it all Joe was the coolest in the room. Captain Kemp, followed by six of his reserves, ran up the steps and mated the crowd into a semblance of order.

Lying on the floor was Tonietta with one bullet wound in her left breast and another in the left cheek. She had died almost instantly. Her sweetheart, Vincenzo, lay near her with his leg fractured by one bullet and a bullet wound in the left shoulder. Dr. Lordi, who had arrived on an ambulance, took Vincenzo to St. Vincent's Hospital. When Vincenzo's wounds have healed he will be taken to the House of Detention as a witness.

Tonietta, who lived at 28 Carmine street, and was 20 years old, was brought to the Morgue when Coroner Shraley arrived. On her breast was a cheap metal pin about the size of a dollar and with little raised figures on it of a man and woman kissing. A small drop of blood had quite blotted out the face of the woman on the pin. Joe Faglia was first taken to Police Headquarters, where he gave his age as 29 years and his address in West Ninth street, Brooklyn. He was later taken before Magistrate Cornell in the Tombs police court and remanded to the Tombs without bail. Before he was led to a cell Coroner Shraley asked him why he carried a revolver. "I bought it," he said, "when Tonietta made faces."

THE ROOSEVELT WILL COME TO ST. JOHN

Capt. Bartlett Deems It Advisable to Hug the Coast All the Way to New York

NORTH SYDNEY, Nov. 28.—All yesterday afternoon Diver Scott had been engaged in ascertaining and repairing the damage to the Arctic steamer Roosevelt resulting from her trip north. Diver Scott will continue his work, and expects to finish this afternoon. Outside the two flanges of the keel is gone, but otherwise her planking is safe, and it is likely the steamer will not require any further repairs until she reaches New York. Capt. Bartlett expects to take the Roosevelt to the International pier this evening where in future they will receive bunker, sailing immediately afterwards for New York.

Pilot Cann will accompany the steamer as far as St. John, N. B., where another pilot will relieve him and go the remainder of the journey with Capt. Bartlett. The latter deems it advisable to take this route owing to the ship's condition and the fact that it would be somewhat dangerous to take the usual course on account of the frail temporary steering gear now on the Roosevelt.

PLUM FOR ROSEBERY'S SON.

Aunt Leaves Neil Primrose a Fortune to Start Him in Politics.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—It is well known that Lord Rosebery strongly approves of the British custom of the eldest son of a great family inheriting the bulk of the family fortune, so that the younger sons are compelled to carve out their own careers by their individual efforts. This custom he is credited with believing has been the salvation of the British aristocracy.

His eldest son, Lord Dalmeny, will inherit his great wealth, but it has always been assumed that his younger son, Neil Primrose, would have to make his own career. But the late Lady Rosebery's aunt, Miss Lucy Cohen, lately deceased, has altered all this. She has bequeathed to Neil Primrose $500,000 and her fashionable London house in order to enable him to devote himself to a political career, for which he is regarded as being excellently fitted.

taken before Magistrate Cornell in the Tombs police court and remanded to the Tombs without bail. Before he was led to a cell Coroner Shraley asked him why he carried a revolver. "I bought it," he said, "when Tonietta made faces."

LUDLOW STREET BAPTIST CALL REV. MR. JENKINS

He Was Informed by Wire and a Reply Is Expected Today

A meeting of the congregation of the Ludlow Street Baptist Church, Carlton, was held last evening to choose a successor to Rev. P. S. Bamford as pastor of the church. A unanimous call was extended to Rev. E. C. Jenkins, who is at present stationed at Starkey's, Queens County. For a while he had charge of a Baptist congregation in Texas, but he returned to New Brunswick some time ago. He is a brother of Deputy Chief of Police Jenkins of this city.

After the call was extended to Rev. Mr. Jenkins, Deputy Chief Jenkins was informed of their decision and wired at once to his brother. It will be known today whether or not he will accept the call. If he does so, which is most probable, he will take charge of the church in a few weeks. The call was extended to Mr. Jenkins by the congregation simply because of his reputation, as he has never appeared before them nor had he applied for the vacancy.

BUCKINGHAM RIOT INQUIRY POSTPONED

MONTREAL, Nov. 28.—The preliminary inquiry into the Buckingham riots came to a sudden end today the hearing being postponed for a week, when the court will sit at Hull, owing to the non-appearance of witnesses summoned by the crown. Evidence was heard today on the charge of manslaughter against the police. With regard to the others it was different.
