

Okanagan, himself a cattle owner and a resident for 12 years beside the Indians, who also stated that he could speak their language, decidedly questioned the census.

I invited him to the camp. I said "take a pencil - put down" "names of men, and the stock" "each has". He did so, and shortly laid his pencil down, having already exceeded the census.

The letter of Mr James Lenihan, now under review, seems to me to contain a portion of the common talk of persons who, without knowledge of the means of acquiring it in reference to the Indian
