In 1898 gasoline sold for six cents a gallon.
In July, 1898, the news was given that a plant would be built to turn out "one motor carriage a week."
Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Chauncey M. Depew, and John Jacob Astor were judges of the second automobile race to be held in this country.
It is hard to conceive that in 1896 there were but four automobiles in the United States.
The first long-distance tour was made from Cleveland to New York. It took from July 28 to August 7.
The first transcontinental run was not made until 1903, and took over two months, from May 23 to July 20.
In March, 1897, in the New York Journal, a writer described his first motor car ride as follows:
"In search of a new sensation, I went yesterday and rode in a horseless carriage."

FEEDING ON PASTURE

Over large areas of Canada the milk produced on grass will always be the cheapest. Hence the proper care of pasture is most essential. If cattle are allowed on the pasture only after the grass is from 6 to 8 inches in height such pasture will yield most feed during the summer and will be best prepared to withstand drought. Natural pasture may be supplemented in the spring and fall by sowing a patch of fall rye, or during the summer months by seeding an annual pasture mixture of oats and clover. The most successful dairymen as a rule feed a limited grain ration even when the cows are on pasture. 2 parts, cottonseed 1 part, or bran 2 parts, ground oats 3 parts, and gluten or ground peas, 1 part, give good results.

MANURE VS. FERTILIZER

Differences Discussed for the Benefit of Canada's Farmers

Farm manures are teeming with bacterial life, and it is for this reason chiefly, I believe, writes Prof. Frank Shutt, that we have found it a successful practice to apply manure to muck soils. Muck is very largely semi-decayed vegetable matter. It looks like carrying coals to Newcastle to put more organic matter on such soil, but nevertheless we do find that even small amounts of barnyard manure are very useful at the outset in reclaiming these muck soils. Why? Partly because the plant food in the muck is not in an available condition, and there is a certain percentage of plant food in manure in an active, readily soluble and available condition.

The value of manure follows from what we may term an inoculation of the soil, the seeding of that soil with germs, with bacteria, and these cause a further breakdown of the components of the soil that will render the plant food of the muck soil available for crops. Consequently we believe there is a strong line of demarcation to be drawn between manures on the one hand and fertilizers on the other; this knowledge will make plain to our farmers why manure is undoubtedly, and must necessarily be, more effective than fertilizers.

There is a value in frequency of application. There is a natural destruction or dissipation of the organic matter in the soils from oxidation and chemical reactions following the tillage, the cultivation of the soil, which results in the loss more or less of this organic matter from the manure.

When we first run our rich soils in the Northwest, there is for the first five years or so a very heavy destruction of humus material. As we proceed we reach a minimum, or at least a limit, below which the destruction of the humus becomes slower and slower. There is, however, always a loss; good farming methods seek to constantly replenish the soil with humus and plant food.

Faucet Tap for Large Cans

Oil cans shipped to an undeveloped region were not provided with a suitable tap, and it was found inconvenient to run off the oil from a plugged hole. The faucet tap shown in the sketch was devised, and proved convenient. A tapered screw was fitted to the faucet, and inserted through the end of the can by driving in the point and then turning the faucet until it was set tightly. A leather washer was provided to make a close joint. When the can is emptied, the faucet is quickly removed by unscrewing the threaded point, and may be used repeatedly.—Popular Mechanics.

DO FISH FEEL PAIN?

Angler's Brief Argument Against the Charge of Cruelty

General opinion appears to be that fish are almost insensible to pain. A keen angler, who had considerable experience, states that, in his opinion, which was only arrived at after most careful observation, fish are almost totally unable to feel pain as we understand it. "When I was a boy," he says, "it was a common occurrence to hook, cast after cast, a young salmon (known locally as 'parr'), which, according to the fishing regulations, we were required to throw back into the river.

As we were fishing for trout, these young salmon became a great nuisance, and in consequence were not removed very carefully from the hook. Some of these, therefore, were rather badly wounded when thrown back into the water, and one would have thought that they would lie low until they had recovered. One day I actually hooked the same fish on no less than three different occasions. Since then I have gathered a considerable amount of similar experience, and am firmly convinced that fish are practically insensible to pain."

TREKKED 400 MILES

By Old Cariboo Trail to Central British Columbia

Central British Columbia, served by the Grand Trunk Pacific line, attracts a steady stream of settlers. Fast train service is the modern method of reaching Canada's new areas, but Grand Trunk officials tell of the arrival at Prince George, B.C., of thirty people, members of four families who trekked up from Armstrong, B.C., over the old Cariboo road, for a distance of 400 miles, attracted by the fertile land awaiting settlement. The journey occupied five weeks. The party brought with them 50 head of stock, a fine selection of poultry and all necessary implements to go on the land at once. The D. P. Siemens family, with this party, brought in more than two score chickens and reported that their poultry had been laying sufficient eggs on the journey to barter for the necessary groceries used on the road. Mrs. Siemens marketed on her arrival at Prince George ten dozen eggs. The only untoward incident of the trip was the killing of one of the horses, which rolled down a steep slope in the Cariboo mountains.
