

He was vice-chairman of the Executive Committee of the Diocese and of the Diocesan Mission Board, and a member of most of the important committees of Synod.

In 1876 he married Mary Sophia, daughter of the late James F. Bradshaw, of Quebec, who like himself, was a general favorite, the Truro rectory being known far and wide for its ever open hospitality and its kindly deeds. Mrs. Kaulbach died last year. Archdeacon Kaulbach leaves one son, Captain Harry A. Kaulbach, now stationed with his regiment in India.

"A man greatly beloved" perhaps best describes Archdeacon Kaulbach. His people had ever the greatest affection for him, and the clergy far and wide both liked and respected him. Had not his natural modesty and his recognition of his somewhat poor health led him to resolutely decline a nomination, he would at one time have been elected bishop of the diocese by, probably, a unanimous vote. As a clergyman his strongest points were his deep reverence in the conduct of divine service, his beautiful reading of the sacred scriptures and the service generally, and his indefatigable zeal and kindness of heart in pastoral visitation. At all times and to all men he was ever one of God's own gentlemen.
