NOVEMBER.—At the Imperial Printing and Paper making establishment at Vienna, Austria, the process of making paper from corn fibre has been brought to great perfection. It is claimed that the paper thus made is stronger than cotton or linen paper of the same weight, that in hardness and fineness of grain it exceeds the best handmade English drawing paper; that it is more durable than any other paper, and is not subject to be destroyed by insects; thus rendering it peculiarly valuable for documents, records, &c. It is unsurpassed for tracing paper; it can be made extremely transparent, and is specially adapted for photography. It is also claimed that all papers usually made from cotton and rags, can just as well be made from this material; that it can be easily converted into the finest writing or printing papers, and almost as advantageously into stout wrapping paper. It readily receives any tint of color.
