

2

The announcement we make to day means the same convenience and economy to our Mail Order Customers as if our great store were in their own town : that is we pay freight or Express Charges to all Railway Stations East of Toronto and as far West as Winnipeg on $25.00 worth of goods ordered from our Fall and Winter Catalogue. Where the rate to points outside of Winnipeg is the same as to Winnipeg we also prepay charges.

This Catalogue contains the very latest styles in Clothing and Outfitting for Men and Women. Most of the garments for women are our own production. Our designers keep constantly in touch with New York, Paris and Berlin so that you have Eastern Styles Up-to-Date, Toronto cash prices direct from manufacturers, Goods delivered in your own town, charges paid.

Our immense stock will respond promptly to almost every possible demand for clothing or material for Men's or Woman's Wear, or for Home Furnishing needs. Our new Catalogue sent FREE on application. Freight paid to all Railway Stations East of Toronto in Ontario, Quebec and Eastern Provinces on purchases amounting to $25.00 and over; also to all Railway Stations west of Toronto as far as Winnipeg, Man. Unite your orders with those of your friends or neighbors if your own purchases don't amount to $25.00. It saves freight and benefits you directly. We do not pay freight on Groceries, Wall Paper and Furniture.

WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGUE Write To-Day! Don't Delay!

TORONTO, CANADA

THE HEAD OF THE FIRM.

Mr. Lindley, of the firm of Lindley & Ferran, had been giving one of the young men in his employ a very bad quarter of an hour. He sat in over the door. He was about to hurry on with an absent smile when she interfrom his desk and facing the culprit. The cashier stood by, formal and solemn, with certain incriminating papers in his hand.

threadbare silk gloves, darned to the last degree, appealed to him with an old memory. She was looking anxious-ly up at the name in big gold letters was true, every word. She uncovered the basic true display is they were and and now she knew it was true, every word. She uncovered the basket and began to display its treasures. "Here's three pounds of butter-I made it myself-an' a loaf o' home made bread. He can keep it in his room, you know. Maybe you'd like to try a little of it?" "Oh I know they're good, the bread the very first one !" she cried, holding out the rough, worn hand and shaking hands with him earnestly. His own hand was white and soft and well kept but he grasped hers with a strong ressure. "It's been the best thing for Bennie, coming here!" she said, after a minute wiping here is she said, after a minute wiping her eyes quite unaffectedly. "He'll make a fine man, I know, being with you. It ain't every day a boy has a chance to come on in the world like that—an' with such a man guidin' him. I told Bennie it was almost like havin' his fother book coming an' Bennie's his father back again. An', Bennie's such a good boy. I couldn't tell in a year how good that boy's been to me and his sisters there at home. There ain't a month that he hasn't sent us money. I've been afraid he'd stint himself. An' last month when the mortgage cane due, we thought the place was gone sure; but on the very day here come the two hundred dollars you lent him-an' me an' the girls just set down an' most cried our eyes out. It was good to know that nobody couldn't take our little home. We're going to get on fine now 'The -- the two hund tight place years ago -but we never bor rowed, not so such as a cap of meal from a neighbor. What we couldn't pay for we did without. Teat's the way Bennie's been raised, an' I know it must o' hurt him to ask you for a lean thut he way near array about me Ican; but he was near crazy about me an' his sisters losin' our home, I reckon. However, we'll all work to-gether to pay it back. It may take a little longer than you think it ought to, but we'll pay it ; you needn't be afraid of that."

-the two hundred dollars ?'

The homely, shabby old woman from the backwoods sat upright with the pride and loyalty and honor of generations of good men and women shining in her sunburnt face. The head of the firm sat still and looked at the bundle of fruit cake on the desk before him until it took all kinds of odd shapes, until it swam and floated and was quite blurred out. After a while, moving painfully, he touched a while, moving painfully, he touched a bell, and a messenger came to the door. He sent the boy for Graham. The young man came in, his face looking drawn and old. At sight of the old woman, who started up with a glad cry, he fell against the door, with a look like death on his face. "Graham," said Mr. Lindley, briskly, before he could say a word— and Mr. Lindley knew how to speak in the most business like manner, though there was a curious break in his voice there was a curious break in his voice "Graham, your mother and I have been talking over that $200 I let you have. I wanted her to hear from me that we not only think you are to be trusted, but that we are going to con-tinue trusting you." Mr. Lindley's voice failing him at this point, young Graham did a very unbusinesslike thing. He fell to his knees and buried his face in his mother's lap like a little boy. The hard old hands smoothing the boyish head were as gentleas if they had been the whitest and softest that ever were. "There are great opportunities for a young man that proves himself worthy to be trusted," the head of the firm went on, clearing his throat. "And even if a boy did make a mistake—they have done it at times, you know, Grabam—why, he might begin over again and make reparation and build up a good character." The boy quivered through every nerve, but he did not lift his head. nerve, but he did not lift his head. Mr. Lindley's face had softened until his best friend would not have known him. "And you might as well leave me with a face, as De Brugere said, "lice that of the Princess de Lamballe, only beautiful," waited for him. He startel and flushed when he saw her, and he began to applogize. "I fam far from home," he said, "and my mother-" people. Let your wile lie with grace," he said, in a low tone to Las-Joselle, "and discown you. You and the boy may go then." Gracia stood erect, facing her hus-band, and the boy, who dropped his hands to his sides at a sharp, low word from his father. "Ah, citizeness of America, formerly the Countess Lac Joselle," said De Brugere, with evident enjoyment of the

"Why is it," she asked, with sterr-ness in her blue eyes, "that you French are ashamed of all that is good and of nothing that is bad? If your nation is all like you, there must come a terrible reckoning."

He blushed again and fumbled with his gold-laced hat. "You are right," he said, gravely, " but you must not judge all our nation by myself, or by my friends, De Brugere, De Lauzun-" The two walked in silence eastward pride or foolishness, to be your former hu-band and son. Taey are fools, idiots! And the guildtine is not for idiots." The circle about the table were breathless. What would she do? To deny her child, to lie in his face, to cast him off, to save the two she loved most in life by a falsehood? Her husband looked at her, hope and love in his eyes. To lie in her child's pres-ence, even to save his life? It would be best to die with him. to the Delaware, and thence to Gracia's aunt's house in Trent street. But the silence brought then together in a way be best to die with him. "These are my husband and my son," she said, in a low voice. There was silence in the group immediately around the table, but loud criss came from the courtyard. De Bragere started and looked straight into her eyes. "The goodness of my wife has destroyed us!" Low layelle muttered. that the white heron's plume, the fan painted by Fragmard, and the scented gloves, which Gracia's mother had allowed hor to accept in the simple Ameri-an way, or a thousand witty speeches had never done.

In time, Gracia had her way, in spite of all arguments, and, in the "Popish chapel," she consented to become Madame Luc Joselle, having dasted the faith of her forefither. Lac-Joselle muttered. become Madame Lac Joselle, having adopted the faith of her forefathers, and she and her husband sailed, with the troops of the Count de Rocham The mob took up the shout. "Your goodness," he said, half mock-ingly, "has enabled you to live. If you had lied," he added, in her ear, "I beau, to France. Her husband's friends, who were very gay, called her "Mees Prim," but they admired her, and the sings and speeches of m re than poetic license, which some of the ladies of society did not object to, were loss of one bad woman would not have mattered; but you are too rare a crea-ture to kill. Go with your husband and child. The way will be made for "" "Of the race of Regulus !" the mob Acties of society did not object to, were hashed in her presence. Once she had a stormy scene th Fernard de Brugere, one of her hus band's friends. It was after dinner at the Chateau de Lac-Joselle. De Brugere had joined the pirty of Robes-piere, and he had cone, very amicably, to say good by to the aristocrat, Lac-Joselle. The thunders of the Terror were beginning to be heard.

twenty years after, the lawyers found, in her will, a bequest of perpetual Masses for the soul of Fernard de Bru-"I drink to Reason, the goddess of "I drink to Keason, the goldess of Reason," De Bragere said, raising his glass; "Reason, the enemy of lies, of superstition, of religion," and he laughed. gere.

his way to the guillotine with the Dake of Orleans, "I can recall one good Lac Joselle knew De Brugere's power, and his heart sank as he saw his wife rise from her chair, and take her boy's hand in hers.

" Monsieur de Brage :e," said she, you must respect children and women.

You were once an innocent child, though I can scarce y believe it-and you mother would do what I do now. She contresied very low, drew her boy of ten after her, and left the room. De Brugere did not rise; he lolled in his chair fazily, but his eyes

Hashed. "The American blood!" he laughed harshly. "I told her once that if you were dead, I would marry her. Jiel ! She is splendid, and I believe that my mother would have done the same thing. I told her once—and I will swear to her semi-minet I will flashed. swear to her again-that I will be even for her scorn of me! She knows that I shall soon hold your fate and hers in the hollow of my hand, and yet, for her religion she defies me! Good-bye, Lac-Joselle. I came to din ner to-day only for a sight of her. Henceforth we are enemies." Forgetting prudence and the fact that De Brugere was his guest, Lac-

Joselle put his hand on his sword. "Come, Monsieur de Lac Joselle, do It will interest some of our readers to know how long ago hot water was used for heating purposes. The story is not long, and I will tell it as I cut it from some old reliable history not much not let us fight ! I shall not avenge your wife's insult is shall not average said, with his hand on the knob of the door. "Your wife is a good woman, a valiant Catholic; but France does not not durch and many norther them make not need such women now; they make us uncomfortable !"

Early in the twenth century, when the Caristian Church was a unit, the Roman Pontifi began to plan for the salvation of those who lived in "the islands of the seas." In 1106 a Bishop's See was established in Iceland, and in He was gone. Lac Joselle shudder-ed. You could hear wild shouts from the village. The parish church was in flames. "Ca ira!" yelled the crowd. "Ca ira!" It mean death to all with 1112 Pope Paschal II. appointed Eric Guupsson Bishop of Greenland and Vinland in partibus infidelum. This Bishop organized the diocese of Greenin the chateau. And he realized now that De Brugere, who had dined with him in a half-friendly way, was his land and perished at his post;

OCTCBER 7,

A PAB

IGNOMINIOUS MALI AN INFAMOUS RA

OCTOBER 7, 1905.

people. Let your wife lie with grace," situation. "These persons claim, from pride or foolishness, to be your former De Brugere heard him, and laughed. "A good woman !" he said, solemnly.

"Of the race of Regulus," cried the would have killed them and you. The

And drunken murderers in the courtrecions ones to freedom ! When Madame de Lac Joselle died,

"At least," he said, when he was on

"You have an unusual memory," he answered. — Maurice Francis Egan in

HOT-WATER HEATING BY MONKS

OF THE MIDDLE AGES.

The Catholic Columbian prints and credits to the Rev. T. G. Dickinson, London, Ohio, a Methodist minister, the following tribute to the monks of the early Christian period of Green-land ...

We live in an age of discovery, and we have have an age of the borey, and pride ourselves upon the things that are new, modern and up to-date, as we say. We enter our residences and public buildings to find them heated with steam and hot water. Those who sell us our heating apparates usually advise the hot water system and tell us advise the hot water system and tell us it is the latest method and the best. We invest, and find there is great comfort in it and praise the modern men of

It will interest some of our readers

Early in the twelfth century, when Orleans laughed.

Benziger's.

land :

genius.

read.

yard echoed it, as she passed with her tony-faced man at his side.

In relation to any race whatsoever An paradox, says the M paradox, says the I Journal. The flag honored by it. A not patriots, but n spirit-traitors to ideals representing of the republic. Then, since bigo not be less than a r national principles of its activity.

of its activity, us Stripes, against the the Catholic discov the first explorers whose devotion the of the early sectler witness; of the me grant of religious established freedor ica? What shall i ible stand against Irish race whose I the ranks of Wash victory in the civil are devoting their and valor to the army and navy?

The base ingrat able folly, the ig bigotry in these would be indeed dishonor, a nation vengeance upon and traitorous p morbid and abno fagrantly incongr rise to the dignity of retribution. I of financial prizes losing more than sitiveness to the It is losing, at saving sense rise of an anti-Ca spirit in Columb recognize the iro The petty prej acterizing the M appeal to the tol-bload-minded A cal and physical that much must i of heredity. Th fanatical fires of religious persecu izing the precep religious liberty intellectual birt ent generations Plymouth Rock. west have no ex assimilating or neither heritage thrust upon th concilably alien phere. Hence t ation throughou ious or racial Catholic or Gae ire were not it sistless appeal which takes t only when Tra heel of Comedy A time was, a ago, when in accrediting the of "ex-priest "cloister" and otonous certitu room or brothe tioning the u ignorant and m ally disproved the intelligent. as the sensatio hypocritical C churches and t lieved that the the vulgar com bigotry, had en for our contem that we unde canacities for dent by the ad current press and landladie sorts of Amer the merrimen readers. Mr. Nobody woods of Be of No Man's dome to the c try boarding

board of the Americans a for $5 weekly dren, Irish a the dog ! For us of Irish ancestr

exclusive con

what though

pose their ha

ospitality representativ

the Cape C mosquito, the

whom Christ

disowns as so Go to !

tolic history

race, with th

famous hero

of classic ar

ity of virt

noble Presi

with thy vo friendly har

and thy na ences for st tions, versu

houses and

I don't suppose there is anything that could be said on your side." said the head of the firm, irritated at the young man's continued silence. He had always been known as an especially merciless man to wrongdoers. "But have you anything to say, Graham ?'

Nothing, sir," he replied.

"It is a misfortune," Mr. Lindley said in his hardest manner, "that a young man just starting out in life, with all his prospects favorable, should throw away his chances through petty So far as we are concerne dishonesty. I should think it would be at an end in this city. You will go to Mr. Sayers' m and make out a menorandum of room and make out a menoration and all the business that has passed through all the business that has past week. He your hands during the past week. He will then pay you the small amount due you. You are fortunate in one thing. In view of your youth we will spare you to a certain extent. We will not pro secute. "I meant to pay it back," he mur mured, miserably. The gray haired man at the desk smiled bitterly. "When young men begin stealing," he said with a point, "they always mean to pay it back, but I have never known one to carry out his intention.

Young Graham shrank as if the other Young Graham shrahm as if the outer had struck him in the face. His lips were whits. He arose and followed the washier from the room and into the little oflice at the farthest corner of the huilding.

head of the firm left the room The alone. Ho put on his has and started out for lunch-not that it was time yet, but he was too much perturbed and annoyed for any further business just now. In his process of "trying out" men he occasionally found one mide for his who seemed especially calling, like young Gravam. It was no pleasure to find that his promising material was also the material for a thief. At the door stood an old woman with basket on her arm. If she had a beggar he would have tossed her a coin and gone on his way, but she was from the country, dressed in her country best, as one who makes one of the most important trips of her life. Her me the way. Do you work here, now? Could you tell me if Bennie Graham is here?

1

Something in the brain of the stiff and dignified man who was the head of the firm stood at attention. "Did you want to see him?" he nice !' asked, after a moment. He did not acknowledge to himself that he was trying to gain time, but it was so The old woman was looking eagerly into his face. "I'm Bennie's mother," she said, with a smile of one who is proud to acknowledge the fact. Mr. Lindley had forgotten all about his lunch. He whispered to one of the clerks near at hand : Tell Sayers to keep Graham there until I send him word. "Graham is-is busy just now," he said, "I will give you a chair in my office for a while, and then I'll make arrangements to send you around to his room-until he can come." The entire force suspended work to watch the head of the firm-conveying an old woman who had evidently come straight from the backwoods, into his private office. But the door closed behind the two and there was nothing to be learned. The visitor was about to sit down at his invitation. "Not that chair!" he said, hastily -young Graham had been sitting in that chair a few moments before, his at in his hand, his head bowed. "Take this chair-it is more out of the draught," he added, lamely, but very kindly, because of the blow, perhaps, that was waiting for her. "Set your basket down-it looks too heavy

"It is heavy," she acknowledged "it a sigh of relief. "I've had to with a sigh of relief. carry it in my lap all the way, even on the train, because it's got some eggs in it. I thought Bennie'd like some fresh eggs from the old home. They ain't like the eggs you get in cities.

mean that those are all "You don't mean that those are all ggs?" asked the head of the firm, eggs ?'

trying to speak joenlarly and not suc ceeding very well. Somehow there was something in the old woman's face that made him shrink from the hurt she was going to receive, as if it had been his own well beloved son that had erred, and the hurt was coming to him. "Oh, no," she cried, with a happy and the butter, too-but I couldn't said thank you," he gasped. The successful man of business had none of the nicities of speech ready. "Do, now; you'll find 'em awful "Do, now; you'll find 'em awful ce !" she urged. "Well, then if you won't take some now-an' maybe it wouldn't be just the thing in this office," she continued, looking around with awe—" if you'll come to Bennie's room this evenin' an' take some, an' some home made jelly I've brought, I'll be as pleased as pie!" Mr. Lindley murmured somethinghe was not sure what it was. The worn hands turning over the contents of the big basket had touched some chord in the heart that persisted in aching.

the heart that persisted in aching. "I'm going to take Bennie by sur-prise," she said, looking up with a smile trembling on her lips and in her eyes. "He didn't know I was even thinkin' of comin.' See, here's a conforter I knit for him to wear when it's bad days this winter; an' there's a cake down there a fruit cake_it ought to be there-a fruit cake-it ought to be good, for all the materials is first class and I never have failed on fruit cake I tell you what, I'm goin' to give you that to take home to your wife an' children. Maybe you have got a boy, an' if you have, I know he'll enjay Bennie thinks there's nothing like my fruit cake."

He tried to say something to keep her from doing it, but she had already taken a knife out of the basket and cut generous half from the great darl and was wrapping it up, her eyes shining with hospitality. " I put a knife in the basket becaus

I knew Bennie'd want some of it the minute he saw it, an' I dida't want any delay runnin' to the kitchen for a knife," she confessed. "I'm glad you all like Bennie. He's a good boy ain't He wrote me how kind every body was to him-an' what a great ma he thought Mr. Lindley was. you'd contrive to give me a glance at Mr. Lindley before I go !"

"I'm Mr. Lindley," said man in the revolving chair. said the gentle

There was nothing boastful in his looks or speech. He said it very humly. He was wondering vaguely if there was any possible chance him to leave town for a day or two. "Well, now, ain't I glad I met you with the most engaging smile.

"I'd take it as a great favor if you would—because I am going to let you take this boy home with you to spend a week and rest up and get acquainted with his mother. He'll find the forter hanging over his desk when he comes back. I think it'll be a good thing to keep it hanging there-make him think of his mother all day long. It's a good thing for a boy to think of his mother pretty often." Mr. Sayers came in after a while and started back in amazement to see his chief sitting there in the office, which was the very synonym of dignity cutting fruit cake with a paper knife and eating it, utterly indifferent to the fact that there was a suspicious mois-ture in his eyes and that glistening drops of it occasionally detached them

"Help yourself, Sayers," said the head of the firm. "Good old fruit cake-made in the country. By the way, Sayers, we're going to give young Graham anothen church. Lat him Graham another chance. Let him go back to his desk and get to work once. Take some more of the cake-it's great. Wish my boy wasn't off at college now-wouldn't he like this ?"-The Sacred Heart.

A PAGE FROM A MEMOIR.

The relatives of the famous beauty Gracia Wells, who was so greatly ad mired at Newport, when the French officers were there in the days of the American Revolution, were shocked when she married a "Papist," the Count de Lac-Joselle.

At Newport, he had paid marked at-tention to this "prim and proud beauty," as his brother officer, De Lauzun, called her. It was not until she met him in President Washington's house at Philadelphia that she conder cended to notice him. It was curious that she—a strict Protestant—should have wandered into the "Popish" chapel one afternoon, and been pleased to see the young count (n his knees before the mysterious lamp in front of the altar. His friend, De Brugere, had asked her to marry him; and, as De Brugere was liberal in all his beliefs, her people preferred him to any other foreigner. Gracia, tall and blonde,

"The goodness of my wife has ruined us," he said. "Well we must try to escape." At the garden gate Lac Joselle, his wife and little Louis met the mob

"Aristocrats !" cri id the leader, who as masked. "The father and the cub was masked. must die ! As for you, madame." the man added, in a voice that Gracia knew too well, "you are a child of the sister nation for which I fought. Go, he added, with a cynical madame," he added, with a cynical laugh, "and see whether you can live by your goodness." She clung to the little Louis. His yellow hair shining in the moonlight was the last thing she saw, as she fell back fainting into the bed of heliotrope, at the foot of the statue of Niobe.

Nhobe. The rage and sin of Paris, the hatred of God, pent up for years, was having its way. Priests had gone out in crowds from the Carmelite monastery, now a den of murderers, to their deat in blood. An actor from one of the theaters, more kind hearted than the others, had sat behind the blood stained table, acting as judge for some time. He had just been relieved by the Cit. izen Brugere. A pale man, with a blonde child by the hand, had come through the reek and smoke and the ranks of pikes, to be examined. "Ah, ha!" Brugere said, looking more cynical than ever, in his red shirt and cap of liberty. "Two aristocrats and cap of liberty. "Two aristocrats. The big one, and the little one! You'll have to die, my friends. The little my grow up, and he will be harder to kill!"

Lac Joselle made no reply ; he stood ect, but he seemed to have lost consciousness. A woman draped in a long black cloak, made her way, in spite c opposition, to the opposite side of this terrible table of jadgment. She was white, but her eyes were luminous with grief and hope. "The little one," she said; " my asband! The little one!" The child held out his hands. De husband !

Brugere's face lighted up. "Madame," he said, in a whisper, "dony that this is your husband or your child. You are an American-the tribunal knows it. Dony that you are the wife of Lac Joselle and the mother of his child. They are not known ; I may, then, say that they ary of the Bishop Arnold succeeded him in 1124. There followed a succession of Bishops until 1409, Endrede Andreasson being the last bishop; and then the early Christian colony disappeared from the map of Greenland. The colony was founded by Eric the Red. A monastery was erected and dedicated to St. Oleus, which in English adjacent lands came to visit it. It stood close to a hill "which vomited fre like Vesuvius and Etna." There was also a great hot water spring near by. The friars conceived the idea of by. The friars conceived the means heating with hot water; and by means heating with hot water and perhaps, as we of pipes, not as good, perhaps, as we make now, they conducted the hot water from the boiling spring into their monastery and church and were comfortable in coldest weather. This water as it came into their kitchen is said to have been hot enough to boil meats and vegetables.

This is not all; they made covered gardens or hot-beds, and heated them with this water and raised fruits, herbs and vegetables that grow out of doors in milder climates. Humboldt tells us that such gardens were constructed by Magnus in the Dominica Albertus conastery at Cologne in the thirteenth century.

Solomcn was right when he said. There is nothing new under the sun.

The early heralds of the cross were ften men of genius as well as heroes, and not a few were statesm Catholic Caurch has blazed the way into all lands and the islands of the seas and in self-supporting missions she stands at the head in our day as of old.

The casket was made for the jewel, not the jewel for the casket. So was made for the soul, not the soul for the body. As the jewel is of far more value than its case, so the soul is of far nore value than its earthly tabernac Only as the case serves the worth anything, and only as the serves the soul is it useful.

All disturbing thoughts have an is full of a kind have balm; and we wonder if it may not be that an angel has been by our side and dropped the dewy fragrance from his wings before he passed back to the body iewel is it body ent progres f the Iris honorable Duly all unavailing hell, for t racial prea compositiousy of malice of ye way for religious p Spangled H free, under brave ! Human ce litical satir al shame patriotic A to touch un-America What is ence of this is the secre