ONE RAILWAY TRIP FOR WHICH TERRY THE TERROR PAID.

on This Occasion the Bad Man Fell In With a Train Conductor Who Was as Brimful of Resources as He

James Terry, the terror of the Red Rock mining district, had a reputation for trying to ride on railway trains without paying his fare. So when the trainmen saw him get aboard they thought there would be trouble.

As the train moved out of the station and the conductor, Billy McMasters, started through the cars to collect tickets.

started through the cars to collect tickets the Terror, who had dropped into a rear seat in the last car, was very much in-terested in as much of the passing landscape as he could see out of the car window in the gathering darkness. Finally the conductor reached the Terror and stretched out his hand for a ticket. But it was no use. Mr. Terry kept his eyes fastened on the whirling panorama of lights outside. McMasters began to realize that he was booked for trouble.

"Ticket, please," said McMasters. He got no response. Becoming slightly annoyed, he placed his hand on the shoulder of the Terror. That worthy then turned and seeing the conductor's out-stretched hand grasped it heartily, ex-

"Howdy? I'm glad to see yer."
McMasters, losing patience, shouted:
"Where's your ticket? How far are you going?"

Why, I'm a fren' of t'e president of this here pike, 'n I ride for nuttin. See, t'at "Well, it don't go, either," said Mc-Masters. "You either pay your fare or get off." And he raised his hand and pulled the signal rope, notifying the engineer to stop the train.

The train stopped, but Mr. Terry made no motion to get off.
"Here, you boys," called McMasters to a couple of brakemen who had been standing near in anticipation of hostili-But as they approached the Terror rose from his seat, whipped out two revolvers and issued an ultimatum on the spot.

"Now, you look here," said James Terry, "I want ter put yer nex' to t'e fac' t'at I'm goin ter Red Rock, about. 30 miles from here. Where's me ticket? Right here in me two mits, 'n if yer ge ter any queer business I'll put ye fellers on t'e Upper Sandusky in two shakes. Savey?

Conductor McMasters was a good strategist. He saw at a glance that it would be a needless risk of life and blood to carry Terry's intrenched position by a frontal attack. He therefore reached for the signal cord and started the train, at the same time waving his hand to the arriving re-enforcements to follow him.

arriving re-enforcements to follow him.

There was an immediate session of the board of strategy in the baggage car at which a plan of campaign was mapped out, although each member of the board declined to be interviewed at the close of the session. The Terror meanwhile remained standing with his back to the window and his eyes searching the situation before him to send any attack from tion before him to repel any attack from the front.

When the train stopped at the next station, Hollygrove, a figure moved stealthily along the station platform from the baggage car to a position direct der the window where the Terror of Red Rock stood, master of the situation. There had always been animosity between the Hollygrovers and the Rockites, and it took very little to provoke a mix up when men from the two places met. When the figure, which was that of one of McMasters' brakemen. reached the Terror's window, he uttered a loud yell:

"I kin lick the best man from Red Rock that ever lived. I kin lick two men from that dead town with my right hand tied behind my back," was what the figure said.

The Terror of Red Rock grew red in the face. He surely couldn't allow such insults to be hurled against his town without resenting them. He hesitated.
"I would think that the Terror of Red Rock with two revolvers was the juiciest kind of cherry pie."

This was too much. The Terror hesitated no longer. He would uphold the honor of his town, come what might. Quick as a flash he threw up the window sash and stuck out his head and shoulders.
"Where's the mut that wants to fight?"

he screamed.

But when he put his head out of the window and turned his back on passing events within the car the Terror played right into Conductor McMasters' long suit. Following the plan of campaign mapped out in the baggage car, the conductor was near at hand when Mr. Terry stuck his head and half his body out o the narrow car window. McMasters made a quick motion and before the Terror could realize his position had shut the window half way down and fastened it so that the bottom of the sash passed across the small of the Terror's back, holding him as in a vise. Conductor McMasters had provided himself with a flat stick which made an excellent paddle, and he soon was giv-ing the Terror the worst paddling he ever had in his life. A brakeman came along and joined in the flank attack with an enfilading fire from another paddle. The Terror's pistols were about as much use as a divining rod is along the Chicago river. Under this terrific punishment from the rear the Terror soon capitulated and dropped his revolvers to the platform. So the attack ceased, and the rough man from Red Rock was allowed to draw his head in and pay his fare, although he protested that it was a swindle to make a man pay his fare who was compelled to stand up the rest of his ride owing to the stress of recent events.

"Isn't it a nuisance to button one's loves?" remarked the Lair young girl whose engagement had recently been an nounced.

"I always let my husband do it for me," said her married friend. "He buttons them in a jiffy. Why don't you let your young man button yours?"

"I did the other evening, and it took him nearly half an hour."

Explained. "Strange that you have never played golf when you live so near the links."
"Hardly strange. My mother-in-law. who lives with us, is a fiend at the game."

When a horse picks up a nail in his foot what does the driver do? Does he whip the limping, lagging animal and force him along? Not unless he wants to ruin the horse. At the first sign of lameness he jumps down, examines the foot and carefully removes the cause of the lameness. What is called "weak stomach" is like the lameness of the horse, only to be cured by removing the cause of the trouble. If you stimulate the stomach with "whiskey medicines" you keep it going, but every day the condition is growing worse. Here is a pleasant story which has never appeared in print, but is known to be true. The poet, Walt Whitman, was, as is well-known, dependent during the most of his life upon the kindness of his friends and admirers for support. A few years before his death, one of these friends called upon him in his little house in Camden, a suburban town of Philadelphia.

"Well, Walt," he said, "how goes it this winter? Any subscription needed for Christmas?"
"No," said Whitman, "no. I'm at work now. I'm in the employ of George Childs. He pays me fifty dollars a month."

"You at work! May I ask what is your occupation?" Why, I ride in the street cars. fall into talk with the drivers and conductors and find out which of them have no overcoats, and guess at their size and notify Childs, and then he sends the overcoats. It's not hard work," said the poet, thoughtfully. "And then, you know, it helps Childs along."

David Christie Murray, the well-known author, told in print some time ago the story of the hardships of his first years in London. Afte carrying about his manuscripts in vain from one publishing house to another, he found himself penniless and homeless. He slept upon the Thames embankment for two nights. For two days he had not eaten food. On the third morning he was standing on London bridge, looking gloomily into the black water, when the editor of a newspaper who knew him passed with a hasty nod. He hesitated, looked at him, and came back.

"Oh, Murray," he cried, "you are just the man I want! Can you spare a couple of hours?"

"Yes," said Murray, dryly. "I want an article on—on Columbus for to-morrow. Birthday article. Nothing labored—no dry dates. Something light, fanciful—you understand? Go to the office. You'll find paper and pens ready. Send it to my desk. And, oh, by the way, I may not be there in time. We'll settle in advance," thrusting a couple of sovereigns into his hand.

"I wrote the article," said Murray, "and found out long afterwards that the birthday of Christopher Columbus did not come for months. From that day success came to me. That man saved my life.' Of almsgiving, as of the giving o advice, it may truly be said Its value all depends upon The way in which it's done

Painting Her Portrait. "If I could be such an old lady as that, so beautiful, serene, sweet, and lovable, I shouldn't mind growing old," said a young girl the other day, speaking of a white - haired visitor who had just departed.

"Well, if you want to be that kind of an old lady, you'd better begin making her right now," laughed keen-witted companion. "She doesn" strike me as a piece of work that was done in a hurry; it has taken a long time to make her what she is If you are going to paint that sort of portrait of yourself to leave to the world, you'd better be mixing your colors now."

The merry words were true; and whether she willed it or not, the girl was already "mixing the colors" for her portrait, and drawing day by day the outlines of the mature womanhood which shall yet brighten or darken the lives around her. Many a careless, selfish girl has in her in most heart no higher ideal than to "be like mother" when she shall have reached mother's years; but in the meanwhile she is content to be as unlike her as possible. She has an idea that age brings its graces with it, and that a beautiful character comes like silver hair, naturally and without effort.
