This unique feature of Creede's will was brought to light by the instituwas brought to light by the institu-tion of a suit for $250 a week by Mrs. Creede, widow of the millionaire miner. She had not lived happily with her husband, and some time during the year before he died he paid her $20,000 in relinquishment of all claims against him. She went to her home in Alabama, and the in-tention was that at the end of the year Creede should obtain a divorce on the ground of abandonment. He died within a year and the suit was never brought.

It was little Dorothy Basford, daughter of Mrs. Edith Scott Bas-ford, who made bright and happy the last days of the Colorado miner He first saw her through a window of his splendid home in Los Angeles. He wanted to adopt her, but her mother protested. When Mrs, Basford became dangerously ill, however, and her life was despaired of, she consented to the appointment of the wealthy miner as Dorothy's guardian. This was near the end of Creede's life. was near the end of Creede's life. The guardian instead of the mother, died. Mrs. Basford recovered, and, although she had trembled for the future of her little daughter because she could not obtain for her the best advantages, she now found that Dorothy had become an heiress to millions.

In his will Creede provided for the future comfort and training of the little one whose childish prattle had brightened his last days, and he directed that she be given the advantages of special tutors. His wishes have been the especial care of Dorothy's mother, and in the fortunate daughter are being developed those strong traits of character which the rough miner thought he saw in his little friend.

Dorothy Creede is in her fifth year now, and she must wait many years before she can come into possession of the $3,000,000 left to her by her guardian. Those who see her often, while mindful of her childish lack of appreciation of what the millionaire's generosity means to her, are confident that when she becomes 21 years old she will come into the Rural Free Mail Delivery.

One of the phenomenal success One of the phenomenal successes in the development of the United States postal system has been the extension of rural free delivery. This was begun two or three years ago, with an appropriation of perhaps $300,000. It has been extended by degrees and with good judgment, and wherever it has reached, if reports are to be credited, it has been a very considerable success. The post-master-general now estimat 3 that the system can be extended over such parts of the country as may use it to advantage at an approxi-mate cost of $20,500,000, and he urges all kinds of reasonable econo my in the administration of postal affairs in order to be able to ask for fuller appropriations in this direction. The estimate for maintaining free delivery in this year on plans already formed is placed at $3,500,000.

Protecting Trees From Rabbits. Rabbits often injure young trees in winter when there is snow on the ground. The mound of earth heads off the mice but is no hindrance to the rabbits. Corn stalks, three or four feet long set all around the tree and tied at the upper and lower ends, are a good protection. Or, the mixture of soot and skim milk, referred to in these columns several times, may be applied with a rag. putting it on the tree as high as the rabbits will be likely to reach.

It is a loss of valuable material to bury a dead animal. We are wont to think of Denmark as a poor little country made up of mountain ranges, forests, fish, fords and poverty; still we note that it exported the past year 129,000,000 pounds of the best butter in the world, worth not less than $33,000,000, besides a large amount of fancy cured bacon which brought a big price.
