The very biggest snowstorm of the season came on April 19, when it is estimated that at least two feet fell. Reckoning that it melted about half as fast as it fell, there remained Sunday morning a good fourteen inches on the ground. It disappeared rapidly during the day and will do much more good than harm as it will hasten the frost out of the ground and store the soil with moisture and assist in swelling the streams for driving. Yesterday rain began falling which is the first that has come this month and, so far as The Observer is able to recall, the first this year. Whether or not the ice is all out of the river this journal cannot ascertain. It melted and disappeared from the river at Hartland and there seems to be little, if any, either up river or down.
