The 25 ft sloop yacht Avis sailed for Campbellton Monday forenoon at 11 o'clock, and went off at a rapid pace with fair wind and tide. Messrs Henry Murray and Jos L. Chiasson were in charge. She reached Neguac, 28 miles from here before three and tied up there for the night. The men were hired by the day to sail her around, and felt that a four hour run before the wind was a good honest day's work. They were tired, no doubt and needed rest. The wind was fair and off the land, thus insuring smooth water and the yacht could easily have reached Tracadie or Poke mouche before dark. But the job wouldn't last long enough if the yacht sailed so far in a day. The voyagers were at Neguac Tuesday, and are probably there still. Mr G. B. Fraser who engaged them to take the yacht around, is expecting a requisition for more supplies.—World

THE COUNTRY DOCTOR.

Rural Physician One of the Heroes of the Country.

There was a sharp ring at the bell, which was followed by footsteps inside, and the door was opened.

"Mrs. — is very sick."

It was 1 o'clock in the morning. Mrs. — lived 12 miles away, and the roads were bad. It was snowing heavily, and blowing a gale.

Mrs. — was poor. She already owed a considerable bill to the doctor who had just answered the summons. The wind whistled about the open door, and the flakes eddied in and melted against the chimney of the lamp in the doctor's hand. The caller left, and in a quarter of an hour the doctor was on his way in the face of the storm. He stilled the voice of pain in that house 12 miles away. He brought on sleep, and left the sufferer pointing towards recovery.

When he turned from his stable door and entered his home, the sun was up and the cock had crowed the morn.

He had been a work of charity, yet he did not believe himself a Samaritan.

Do you ever think of the country doctor as the smartest of the city physician passes your door? He is one of the heroes of our young nation. As peace has her victories, she has her heroes, even greater than those of war. He who fights with blood and flesh visible, dressed in the uniform of the enemy, fights while the world watches, fights to kill, while the press waits to make his name known as the smoke has cleared away. The soldier fights for honor, love, and country, fights for crosses, decorations, and recognition. But what of the country doctor who fights to save, who fights the foe invisible, fights without the calcium of the press being pointed on him, fights through cold and heat, darkness and discouragement, mile upon mile he goes.

League upon league is nothing new to him.

Remember the country doctor. He has no coachman.

His own hands become numbed and blue with the driving. There are no brass buttons beside him, there is no high-stepping hackney, and no pneumatic-tired carriage to ride in.

He knows no asphalt.

Did you ever try the side lines and feel the corduroy?

Matriculant of the same school, graduate of the same university, seat-mate, chum, fellow of his conferees of the city, they parted at the convocation. They attended the same lectures, witnessed the same operations, enjoyed the same opportunities, and then they parted. He to the country, to the quiet and solitude of the simple, single-hearted life near the soil. Obsolete? Yes, for his name is upon no brass plate, or reflected to hurrying humanity from a transom.

His name is not noted in the press as performing some remarkable operation. Yet, even as his brother of the city, he does perform remarkable operations.

Is the anatomy of the son of the soil, of the hand-maiden of the country, is it less complicated, is it less delicately constructed, than that of the city's great ones?

Not much.

So on he goes, a hero, sometimes bringing in the youthful pilgrim of the night, and sometimes easing the journey of the aged one as he moves to the other shore. On he goes, seeks no other satisfaction than the doing of duty.

Did you hear the wind blowing about your bedroom window? The register was open and the room was warm, but as the wind waked you by its shriek you shivered as you turned to listen.

He drove 24 miles in that gale—Charles F. Raymond, in Toront-Star.
