The cheese situation in England, said Mr. Grant, "is a very peculiar one -about 60 per cent of the retailers are selling cheese to the public at less than the wholesale price. Some of the biggest shopkeepers in England are selling heese as low as 5d and 6d per lb, retail, when the same cheese could have been sold at 6d to 61/2d per lb. The other 40 per cent are cutting up cheese at 7d per lb, but of course those who are retailing cheese at 5d and 6d a lb are doing 80 per cent of the trade. "This question of preferential trade has been mentioned in the House. In times past leading public men have advocated preferential trade, but al-ways annexing to their suggestions a demand for England's action with which it was well known England would not comply. All the advocates of preferential trade, at all events, all who have taken an active part in that movement, have assumed that as the movement, have assumed that as the first step England must consent to put a duty on corn. We know that England does not view that project with favor. We know that no more unpopular project can be offered the English people than to ask them to put a duty on breadstuffs. It may be that as time olls on, and at an early day, they may change their views. It may b that they may see it to be in their in-terests to make this distinction, and
