

OUR MEDICAL STUDENTS.

INAUGURAL MEETING OF THE TORONTO MEDICAL SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The President's Address—Discussion on Typhoid Fever in Toronto—City Water v. Well Water.

The inaugural meeting of the Toronto Medical School Society was held in the school on Saturday evening.

The president, Dr. Adam Wright, read a little from Mr. Edwin A. Smith, of the city pharmacy, offering two prizes for the best essay on (1) the therapeutics of opium and mercury salts and potassium salts; (2) the use of the thermometer in the treatment and diagnosis of disease.

On motion of Messrs. Montague and Coulter a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Smith, to which he made a suitable reply.

The president stated that other gentlemen had promised substantial aid.

About fifteen gentlemen were then proposed as members of the society.

Dr. Richardson, in taking the chair, expressed his sympathy with the aims of the society, and then called upon Dr. Adam Wright to give his INDUSTRIAL ADDRESS, in which, after thanking the society for electing him president, he announced his intention of dealing with (1) the objects and prospects of the society, (2) the school, (3) their profession.

The society would learn the conditions of the school, and with the view of encouraging the latter to join, it had been decided to make them members on payment of a single entrance fee.

The objects would be literary, scientific and medical. Papers would be read on medical subjects, and a number of cases presented for examination.

In point of attendance, he hoped they would show a good example to the Toronto medical society.

His school, after a vigorous existence of 39 years, still occupied a place in the front rank of the best medical societies in America, a result which was due to the faithful labors of the senior members of the faculty.

THE STUDENTS AND THE POLICE. Speaking of the kindly and intimate relations between the teachers and students, Dr. Wright said that the former made no attempt to command respect by clubbing students after the manner of those valiant men, the members of the Toronto police force.

Later on in the address, he advised the students to refrain from midnight romances in company with their friends, the "bobbies," notwithstanding the moral benefits which the policemen must derive from the association.

He told an anecdote of a policeman who was walking arm in arm with an artist student, when the latter said, "Do you ever mistake you for a poet, and tie a laurel wreath on your head, which your companion replied, "Not yet, but I've got an ass tied to me now."

Speaking of the great change which has taken place in popular sentiment regarding the medical profession, the essay read an advertisement taken from a paper 300 years old, "Wanted, a sober, steady person in the capacity of doctor, surgeon and man-of-war. He must occasionally act as butler, dress and trim wig. He will be required to read prayers and preach a sermon every day."

But when they looked at the absurd and empirical methods of treatment pursued in those days, they would not be surprised at the low estimate in which the profession was held by the public.

The high and honorable position now held by the profession was due to the wonderful advances in the study and practice of medicine made since that time.

The essayist closed by referring to the great and serious responsibilities which would rest upon his hearers in the profession they had chosen, and resumed his usual great applause.

The chairman spoke of the clinical society formed by the students at Guy's hospital, London, which in a very short time acquired such importance that the regulations of the hospital had to conform to its wishes.

A discussion then took place on the causes of the epidemic of TYPHOID FEVER in the city. It was opened by Mr. Montague, who said there were two theories of the exciting cause of the disease. One was that it was a poison arising from the decomposition of organic or inorganic substances.

The other theory, and that most commonly received, was that it was a specific poison from an organized germ derived from a previous case of the disease.

The latter theory has made of it one favored by the speaker who supported it by a number of remarkable instances. He arrived at the following conclusions: That typhoid fever arises from a specific poison.

That there is no reason for supposing the present epidemic an exception to that general rule.

That the nature of the contagion is such that one case is more than sufficient to use a wide spread epidemic of very great length of time after its occurrence.

whether the drains themselves were not a source of the disease.

The chairman gave an account of the first typhoid epidemic in the city, which arose from defective drainage in a number of houses near the ravine at the corner of Anson and Church streets.

This closed the discussion. Mr. Duncan also describing the shrinking and timid nature of the freshman in a manner which drew tears to the eyes of every one, moved a vote of thanks to Dr. Richardson, which was seconded by Mr. Culbertson and carried amid enthusiastic applause.

The meeting adjourned at a little before 11.

THE JANE MILLER BRANDON.

Mr. Peter A. Scott's Efforts to Secure a Government Inspector of Steamboats in the Lost Propeller.

A few days after the Jane Miller was lost, Mr. Peter A. Scott, the well known lumberman of this city, wrote to the department of marine and fisheries at Ottawa, suggesting that the disaster should be made the subject of a government investigation, as he considered the propeller unseaworthy.

In fact "the worst piece of workmanship" was received from the deputy minister to the effect that the department was in communication with the inspector of steamboats in regard to the matter.

Last week a second letter was addressed to Mr. Scott informing him that steamboat inspector Menzies had reported that although a rough piece of workmanship, still the Jane Miller was strong.

Mr. Scott is not satisfied to let the matter rest here. He wants a government investigation and writes to The World calling upon Mr. James Beatty, M. P. for West Toronto, to take the matter up and urge it before the authorities at Ottawa.

Mr. Scott selects Mr. Beatty from among the other city members because Mr. Beatty speaks against "floating" officers at the meeting in this city subsequent to the terrible steamboat disaster at London.

Mr. Scott claims the Jane Miller was not a floating officer, and says that Mr. Beatty has now a splendid chance to be of service to the public.
