

breaches of respect for the privileges and immunities of officials continued to occur in other regions. The Secretary-General firmly believed that ending such instances of violations of the privileges and immunities of officials would be possible only when all Member States concerned scrupulously and unequivocally observed their obligations under the existing international legal instruments. To that end, the Secretary-General, therefore, expressed his determination to continue to work with the authorities and Governments concerned in a constructive spirit.