REV. W. J. CLARK ON THE STRIKE

He Advocates Arbitration on All Matters in Dispute.

Thinks It Too Late in the Century to Object to Collective Organization.

At First Presbyterian Church, on Sunday morning, Rev. W. J. Clark referred to the street railway strike now in progress. They had all been disinterested over the state of affairs existing. The general public were being seriously inconvenienced. The company was losing money and gaining ill-will. Men who would fain be at work were out of employment. Probably, as in all such disputes, absolute right was not on either side. As to the request of the men to be heard collectively, it must be allowed that they have a right to combine in a union, so long as they do not use the power thus gained in a tyrannical manner. But it was altogether too late in the century to say that men had not a right to work together in lawful organization in furtherance of their interests. As to the present disagreement, he felt that neither the company nor its employees were the parties to settle existing difficulties in an equitable fashion, for their quarrel was warfare—had destroyed the possibility of their viewing the facts judicially. In his opinion the company and the men should be willing to submit all the matters in dispute to a board of three arbitrators, one by the company, one by the men, and these two to choose a third, preferably out of the city; the decision of this board to be final as to all matters of dispute. That, it seemed to him, would be a fair and honorable method of putting an end to a strife which was injurious to all concerned in it. He had referred to the dispute because we were all concerned in the matter, and all were bound to use what little influence they might have for the good of the community at large. He commended the suggestions he had ventured to make to the consideration of the citizens of London, and especially to the street car company and the men who are out.

SHOT IN THE LEG

Folly and Fondness for Fireworks Result in a Serious Accident.

Fred Terry, a lad about 17 years of age, living at 354 Lyle street, as the result of his folly, is now laid up in a little white bed in the general hospital. On Saturday evening young Terry procured a 32-caliber cartridge, and having a fondness for fireworks, wanted to see it "go off." He placed the cartridge on one stone, got down on his knees, and hammered it with another stone. The thing exploded, and the bullet entered the boy's left leg just above the knee. Dr. English was called, and the boy was removed to the hospital, where an operation was performed a few hours later by Drs. English and Stevenson. The ball's position was in close proximity to some of the large arteries, and could not be located by probing. Yesterday a photograph of the leg was taken with the X rays, which plainly shows the bullet's position. Another operation was performed today, when the ball was extracted.

I. O. O. F. AT CHURCH

Local Lodges Celebrate the Order's 80th Anniversary—An Historical Sermon.

Yesterday was Oddfellows' day in London when about 250 of the Independent Order of Oddfellows attended divine service in King Street Presbyterian Church in commemoration of the foundation of the order 80 years ago. At 3.45 the following lodges left their halls, under the leadership of their respective leaders, and proceeded to the church, where an able sermon was preached by Rev. Thomas Wilson: Canton Lodge, No. 1, Patriarchs Militant; Harmony Encampment, No. 3; Adelphi Encampment, No. 38; Eureka Lodge, No. 39; Fort City Lodge, No. 33; Dominion Lodge, No. 48; Chorazin Lodge, No. 130. The edifice was filled to overflowing, and the service was an impressive one throughout. The center of the church was reserved for the brethren, and the side pews for their friends. The choir of King Street and Elizabeth Street Churches ably assisted in the musical portion of the service, which, with so many male voices lending their aid, was a marked feature when the whole congregation sang.

"Blest be the tie that binds Our hearts in Christian love; The fellowship of kindred minds Is like to that above."

Rev. Mr. Wilson chose as his text Matthew xxv., 40: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." The preacher first greeted the brethren cordially, and expressed his pleasure at having been selected to the honor of preaching the sermon upon the 80th anniversary of an order of such prominence, historically and numerically. The basis of the sermon was the purpose for which the order existed, and the encouragement given. The order had a small beginning, but was destined for a great future. There had been some difference of opinion among authorities as to the origin and nucleus of the order that was now to be found in every clime, and counted its members by the million. Regarding a discussion which occurred at the convention in Boston last September, the preacher offered an explanation. In 1306, he said, ten men had bound themselves together in New York, and this was, he thought, the first seed of the order, but in 1815 five more brethren joined themselves together in Baltimore, they received the first charter. In 1820 the order was established in Boston; in Brooklyn and Philadelphia in 1821; and many other places between the years 1821 and 1824. Today they encircled the globe. The membership in 1886 in North America was 517,310, and in 1898 the membership had increased 60 per cent, and was placed at 844,339. Added to this was the Order of the B. O. B. which is in connection with the society, and has 300,000 members. Having completed the historical sketch, Rev. Mr. Wilson dwelt upon the three links in the chain which bound them together, viz., friendship, love and truth. These he hoped he might strengthen, for no matter how strong the chain, it was only as strong as its weakest link. The Oddfellows, he said, were devoted to the care of the widow and the orphan. Beyond this the order strove to help a man while he lived, instead of after he was dead.

The Male Quartet of the Colborne Street Methodist Church sang "When Circles Are Broken" (Koschaty) a selection appropriate to the occasion, in a pleasing manner. The service ended, the society marched back to their headquarters, where the procession broke up.

But there's no need to feel like that. Listen to J. W. Gardner, Haville, Ind. He says: "Electric Bitters are just the thing for a man when he is all run-down, and don't care whether he lives or dies. It did more to give me new strength and good appetite than anything I could take. I can now eat anything and have a new lease on life." Only 50 cents, at W. T. Strong & Co's. Every bottle guaranteed.
