

COMMUNITY SING-SONG GROWS IN FAVOR; OLD AND YOUNG HEARTILY JOIN IN WEEKLY TIME OF JOLLITY

Sing a song of sixpence, a pocket full of rye, four and twenty blackbirds baked in a pie...

The birds (not black, be it known) sang under the leadership of A. D. Jordan at the community sing-song in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium last night.

Incognitites. There was the man who never takes off his hat when he sits his hair cut, singing "With Your Hair Cut Short as Mine," quite unconscious that the pretty maidens at his side were convulsed with laughter at the incongruity of the situation.

Further along in the audience was the girl in her early teens, knitting at a sock, playing her needles rapidly, when "Pack Up Your Troubles" was sung, but slowly, as the words of "Juanita" escaped from her lips.

Oh! To Be the Bugler. Maidens whom one would expect to see flee from a tiny mouse sang with all the earnestness imaginable the line, "Some day I'm going to murder the bugler, in the chorus of "Oh! How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning." One lad with an eye for beauty was heard to murmur, "How I'd like to be the bugler."

Just as Miss Lulu Somerville had sung "Why don't you look at your book and see how you are looking at me?" to E. N. Harding, in the duet, "A. B. C.," hydro audience saw the humor of the situation and heartily applauded. Evidently the pupils kept looking at the teacher, for the singing stopped until the lights were restored.

Interest Growing. If the interest that was shown last night is any criterion, the Auditorium will not be large enough to hold the crowds that are bound to gather this winter for the sing-songs. Old and young, thoughtful and lighthearted, from the workshop, the office and the den, they all come to spend a pleasant evening in a family sing-song. The family spirit (not ghost) was there. All were brothers and sisters for the time being. Despite the unfavorable weather the auditorium was well filled, and apparently each and every one enjoyed the evening. The orchestra, an innovation that was started last night, materially assisted in the various numbers. Like the audience, the orchestra is gathered from the four quarters of the city. Any musician is given a cordial invitation by Mr. Jordan to attach himself to the orchestra.

ASSORTED DOOMS FOR KAISER BILL

So many letters have come showering into The Advertiser post-box, giving suggestions as to what should be done with the Kaiser that it is impossible to print them all in full.

A specially interesting one, written by one who calls himself "Layman," is, however, given in full, and reads as follows:

"Whatever retribution or retaliation we would like to see imposed upon the ex-Kaiser, the swagging war lord, the beast of Berlin and still unpunished heavy villain of the great war drama, just ended, we should first remember the old adage in making hure soup. 'First catch your hare.' William Holenzeller, the sinister influence and moving spirit behind the German war lords and the German army, is just across the border in Holland, as restless in his narrow restraint, no doubt, as was Napoleon at Elba. There he is, Jonah to Hollanders, despising them while enjoying their hospitality, and the measure of personal safety that a neutral flag assures."

Is It a Sham? "We may be sure his ear is to the ground to catch any political cross-currents that would seem to favor his return to temporarily defunct Germany as its imperial head once more. Is there not a possibility that the ex-Kaiser's abdication and the bloodless overnight revolution is a cunningly concocted sham to lull the Allies and cloak sinister designs looking to the future not yet fully apparent? The fact that the late emperor refused to sign the humiliating armistice along with the suspicious circumstance that the brutal and blood-thirsty Hindenburg is still acceptable to the revolutionary party as leader of the German armies, is, to say the least, very disconcerting to all who hope and plan, looking to the future peace of the world."

Make Holland Surrender Him. "The first step, then, in dealing with the ex-Kaiser is to demand, at least, is for the Allied powers to peremptorily demand of Holland that she surrender him and the crown prince, if not the whole staff to Allied keeping. If they are found to be murderers under the law they should suffer the same penalty as the same as the humblest criminal would under like conviction. If, however, they can only be held as political offenders of the most virulent type, whose liberty would be a danger and a menace to the world's peace in the future, then they should be exiled, like Napoleon, to some remote and almost inaccessible island, carefully guarded for life, well fed and clothed and left to their remorse, a warning to future generations of those who would deluge the world with blood and tramp rough-shod over the liberties of free peoples in order to gratify personal vanity and pride."

Another says: "We know he has done many things against us and our country but if we do something with him now we are only putting ourselves on an equality with him. Why not let the Righteous Judge of all the earth do with him as he sees fit." The writer goes on to quote scriptural passages which would bear out this suggestion.

Quite in contrast reads the next letter: "I wonder what the boys and husbands who sleep in Flanders fields between the crosses row on row, would say, if they could, what they would have liked done with the Kaiser and his six 'safety-first' sons. Methinks they would expect their course to be that of a death was avenged, and I believe they would refuse to bloom if we poppies would refuse to bloom if we break faith with those who died for us."

Make Him Work. "I would take him to France or Belgium, put a pick and shovel in his hand and compel him to help repair the land which he has so terribly marred. He would feed him well and clothe him comfortably, but by all means make him work at least ten hours daily. If this would kill him, then let him die," says Orville Eadie of Grade VII, Tecumseh School.

"I would take Kaiser Bill and his staff and make them make small stones out of big ones, and feed them on bread and water as long as they live," is the advice of Frank Paisley of Woodstock, Ont.

"Deal with him as with any other criminal. Show no regard of persons. Give him an honest trial, and when convicted, be sure he is punished according to his sentence. Why should we make any exception in the case of royalty? The moral responsibility is the same for everyone."—W. B. Laws, Watford.

Roll Him On Tacks. "I would have him brought here and dressed as Adam and Eve were in the garden of Eden. Then I would give him the choice of walking or rolling from here to Springfield Park, strewn the road just half an inch thick with carpet tacks before he started, and placing a company of men along the road, armed with pointed returned soldier to help him on his way. Then I would let him spend the rest of his life on an island pulling out the tacks.—George Keats, London.

"That he should be released of this life, sliced up and put up in a cauldron and boiled that the Entente Allies may have a social time at the conference, is the recommendation of M. Bloomfield of Centralia, who has a number of formulated plans for torpedo-proof ships used by the British admiralty, and also designs for a new type of submarine, the part of the authorities seeking advice in this matter.

"I believe that the Kaiser should not be allowed to run at large, as he is an old hypocrite and the devil will have to get him before his kingdom is complete. If he is left free he is sure to make trouble," says one.

Cage Him. "I would take him in an iron cage like any other ferocious beast and take him about the country, from town to town, and exhibit him, charging a fee to the public, the money to be devoted to the Belgians," declares another.

"The him up and burn him 'cause he hurts people," is the advice of a wee lot of four years, whose mother forwarded her advice to The Advertiser.

"I think that inasmuch as he has made others to suffer, his body ought to be made to suffer by man. God will see about his soul. I would keep him in close confinement for the remainder of

ABOUT 180 MEN OF AQUITANIA COMPANY ARE EXPECTED HERE

Party of Returned Soldiers Probably Coming Sunday.

The London branch of the soldiers' aid committee has been advised that 8 officers and 171 men out of the 4,000 returned soldiers who arrived at Halifax on Sunday are expected to arrive some time on Sunday.

Make Holland Surrender Him. "The first step, then, in dealing with the ex-Kaiser is to demand, at least, is for the Allied powers to peremptorily demand of Holland that she surrender him and the crown prince, if not the whole staff to Allied keeping. If they are found to be murderers under the law they should suffer the same penalty as the same as the humblest criminal would under like conviction. If, however, they can only be held as political offenders of the most virulent type, whose liberty would be a danger and a menace to the world's peace in the future, then they should be exiled, like Napoleon, to some remote and almost inaccessible island, carefully guarded for life, well fed and clothed and left to their remorse, a warning to future generations of those who would deluge the world with blood and tramp rough-shod over the liberties of free peoples in order to gratify personal vanity and pride."

Another says: "We know he has done many things against us and our country but if we do something with him now we are only putting ourselves on an equality with him. Why not let the Righteous Judge of all the earth do with him as he sees fit." The writer goes on to quote scriptural passages which would bear out this suggestion.

Quite in contrast reads the next letter: "I wonder what the boys and husbands who sleep in Flanders fields between the crosses row on row, would say, if they could, what they would have liked done with the Kaiser and his six 'safety-first' sons. Methinks they would expect their course to be that of a death was avenged, and I believe they would refuse to bloom if we poppies would refuse to bloom if we break faith with those who died for us."

Make Him Work. "I would take him to France or Belgium, put a pick and shovel in his hand and compel him to help repair the land which he has so terribly marred. He would feed him well and clothe him comfortably, but by all means make him work at least ten hours daily. If this would kill him, then let him die," says Orville Eadie of Grade VII, Tecumseh School.

"I would take Kaiser Bill and his staff and make them make small stones out of big ones, and feed them on bread and water as long as they live," is the advice of Frank Paisley of Woodstock, Ont.

"Deal with him as with any other criminal. Show no regard of persons. Give him an honest trial, and when convicted, be sure he is punished according to his sentence. Why should we make any exception in the case of royalty? The moral responsibility is the same for everyone."—W. B. Laws, Watford.

Roll Him On Tacks. "I would have him brought here and dressed as Adam and Eve were in the garden of Eden. Then I would give him the choice of walking or rolling from here to Springfield Park, strewn the road just half an inch thick with carpet tacks before he started, and placing a company of men along the road, armed with pointed returned soldier to help him on his way. Then I would let him spend the rest of his life on an island pulling out the tacks.—George Keats, London.

"That he should be released of this life, sliced up and put up in a cauldron and boiled that the Entente Allies may have a social time at the conference, is the recommendation of M. Bloomfield of Centralia, who has a number of formulated plans for torpedo-proof ships used by the British admiralty, and also designs for a new type of submarine, the part of the authorities seeking advice in this matter.

"I believe that the Kaiser should not be allowed to run at large, as he is an old hypocrite and the devil will have to get him before his kingdom is complete. If he is left free he is sure to make trouble," says one.

Cage Him. "I would take him in an iron cage like any other ferocious beast and take him about the country, from town to town, and exhibit him, charging a fee to the public, the money to be devoted to the Belgians," declares another.

"The him up and burn him 'cause he hurts people," is the advice of a wee lot of four years, whose mother forwarded her advice to The Advertiser.

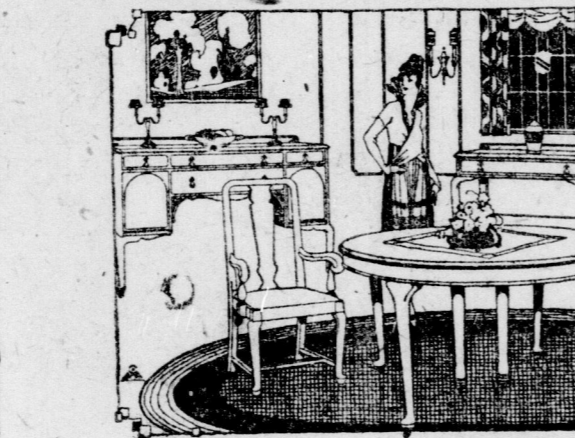

"I think that inasmuch as he has made others to suffer, his body ought to be made to suffer by man. God will see about his soul. I would keep him in close confinement for the remainder of

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS. THE GREAT URINARY TRACT REMEDY. RHEUMATISM, BRIGHT'S DISEASE, GRAVEL, DIABETES, BACKACHE, SAND, NEURALGIA, CALCULI, AND ALL KIDNEY DISEASES.

WHEN you buy furniture from this store you have the privilege of 'making your selection from the finest assortment of dependable furniture built in America to-day. Why not invest your earnings in furniture of this kind—the permanent kind that will serve you well in after years.

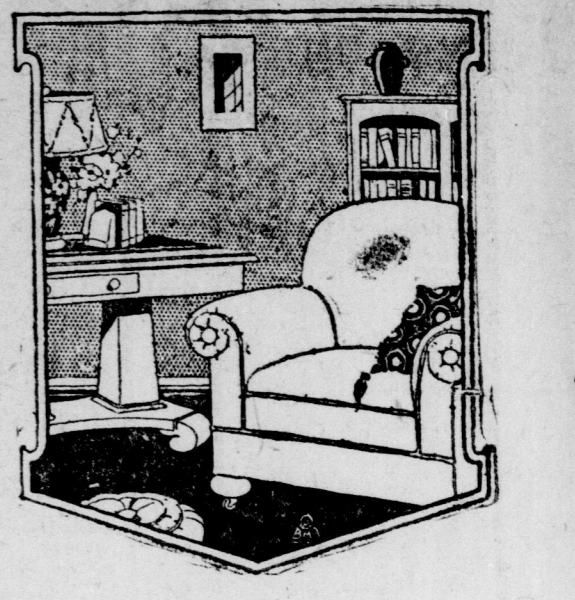

Don't Enjoy Your Neighbor's Home, Make Him Envy Yours

MAHOGANY Dining-room Suite, in Queen Anne design. Built by one of the foremost manufacturers of quality furniture in America, this suite represents the finest work of the cabinet-maker and furniture craftsman. Its fine quality is apparent to the most casual observer.

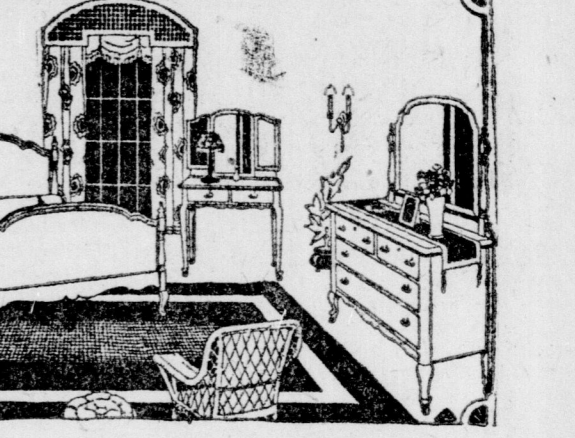

Furniture Is An Investment Paying Constant Dividends of Satisfactory Service

IN these days every dollar spent must render a good account of itself, especially since Victory Bonds and War Savings Stamps must be purchased and the national spirit of conservation carefully fostered. As Government securities are an investment of permanent character, so, too, is good furniture an investment that satisfies indefinitely. Furniture of real quality that will please and satisfy you for years to come is the only kind that you should buy these days because compromising on quality is both wasteful and extravagant. When furnishing your home make your investment of such character that it will pay dividends in long years of satisfactory service.

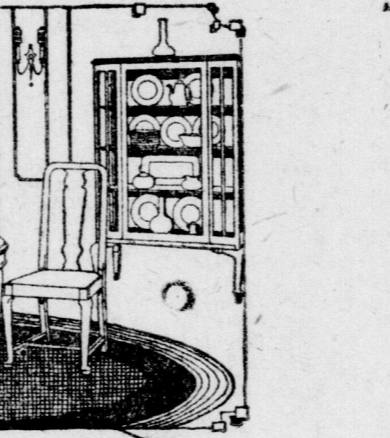

YOU can buy furniture here with complete confidence, absolutely certain that if not only is of the finest design but it also has the necessary quality to afford perfect satisfaction in years to come. Make your investment in furniture of the same permanence as your investment in Government securities. Both pay steady dividends.

Here at Moderate Cost is the Bedroom You've Longed For

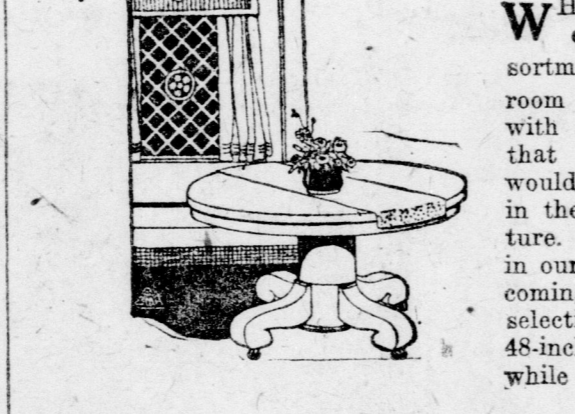

AN exhibition here you may see—the finest period suites of oak, mahogany and walnut at prices we could not duplicate were we to purchase this furniture to-day. But the chief characteristic of this furniture is its untailing quality, which will insure service for many, many years to come.

TOYS For The Kiddies

TOYLAND opens tomorrow with a fascinating array of games, dolls and mechanical toys for the little ones. Everybody with a child's name on the Christmas shopping list should visit Toyland in our Basement. Everything that's new in English, French, Japanese, Canadian and American Toys.

Dining Tables At Lower Prices

WHEN we purchased this fine assortment of Dining-room Tables we did it with a full knowledge that furniture prices would rapidly increase in the very near future. You may share in our good fortune by coming to-morrow and selecting one of these 48-inch top Tables while priced at $29.00.

GOOD Blankets of fine qualities are rare things in these days of wool scarcity, but we have an unusual selection of good, warm Blankets at prices that are a real economy.

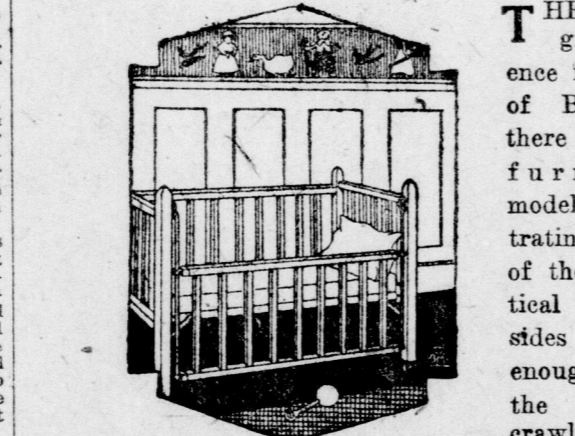

Library Tables of Unique Design

YOU will be astounded at the supreme values we are showing in fine Library Tables right now. There are many unique designs in Period styles in every favorite wood and finish at prices which we will never be able to duplicate again. These Tables are priced from $15.00 to $35.00.

A Dainty White Crib For the Baby

THERE is just as great a difference in the design of Baby Cribs as there is in any other furniture. The model we are illustrating here is one of the most practical designs with sides plenty high enough to prevent the baby from crawling out of the crib and falling, and in addition one side may be conveniently lowered, as shown here. It is made of wood, enameled white and makes a safe, convenient bed for the baby. It is specially priced at $4.95.

EVERY Man Will Appreciate The Convenience of This Dresser

HERE is a piece of furniture that is specially designed for the man of the house, giving him a place for every article of his apparel and yet built so compactly that it takes up but little space in the bedroom. For lasting satisfaction, give the man in your household one of these fine Dressers. Priced at $35.00.

Sole Agents for Happy Thought Stoves, Pathe Phonographs, Ostermoor Mattresses.

The Ontario Furniture Co., Limited

228-230 DUNDAS STREET. We Pay Freight Charges Within One Hundred Miles of London.

things all his own way, he had nothing to say about Mr. Spotton. In fact, he rather thought that Mr. Spotton was not such a bad fellow, and that he was in the audience when Mr. Lucas was out for the government to have going about taking holidays at any old time.

Bricker told him of some of his remarks about Mr. Fraser, and about Government extravagance. The next day the Hon. J. B. Lucas beat it for home with the story that North Huron was lost.

G. N. W. TELEGRAPHERS AWAITING WORD AS TO WHETHER STRIKE IS ON

While there is nothing definite on the question, yet there is a probability that the G. N. W. telegraphers will go on strike within a day, according to information from local members of the union. They are awaiting word from the president of the union. This is expected within 24 hours.

IN POLICE COURT

Maurice Gootson once more made his appearance in police court today. Maurice wanted to show his ability to prove himself innocent of keeping a junkyard at the rear of 39 Maitland street, but as he did not have any witnesses present he had to have his case adjourned for a week. Sanitary Inspector J. P. Leitman reported that Maurice White and Barney Lewis had cleaned up their part of the yard, but that Gootson still had several hundred tons of scrap iron there.

SERGEANT GEO. DUGUID RELEASED AFTER 3 YEARS IN GERMANY

On November 18 he reached England and there he regained much of his lost strength. On November 18 he reached England and there he regained much of his lost strength. On November 18 he reached England and there he regained much of his lost strength.

Mr. Lucas hung his head when Mr. Fraser, Liberal candidate, and he came down pretty hard on him. But he was somewhat surprised when he found out there was a man in the audience to defend Mr. Fraser, in the person of Mr. S. Bricker, president of the North Huron Liberal Association, and to take the platform in defence of the Liberal candidate.

TRIBUTE TO AMERICA. London, Nov. 28.—The Duke of Connaught, the Earl of Reading and James M. Beck spoke at a Thanksgiving Dinner at the Pilgrim's Club this afternoon. The first two said the President Wilson would receive a warm welcome in England, the Earl of Reading paying an eloquent tribute to the part America has played in the war.