

panes of glass in his windows, boards on his barn, &c. Commence threshing as soon as your out-door arrangements are made for winter. Early made cyder should now be racked off; be careful to put it into clean casks. Fattening swine that do not feed well, give a dose of brimstone or antimony.

DECEMBER.

The season is now fast advancing for the use of sleighs and sleds, which you should see in readiness. Most business performed by sledding is done to the best advantage early in the season. The farmer, at this season has generally a supply of cash on hand, which he will do well with, (after paying his taxes) to discharge without delay, those small sums due the doctor, merchant, mechanic and common labourer, or at least to come forward and make a complete settlement with each, and pay what he can conveniently; this will establish his credit in future with them, and be a means of knowing his own income. At this inclement season be ever mindful of that invaluable blessing, your health. "Health is the labourer's right hand;"—let him not lose it for want of caution. The healthy and ambitious too often give a strong constitution the mortal wound, while they suppose it invulnerable. The restoration of health is difficult and expensive—the art of preserving it, cheap and easy.—A celebrated physician has comprehended it in three concise maxims—"Keep your feet warm—your back straight—and your head cool."
