

Bremner. The Rev. J. Breading, in whose mission the above place is situated, writes that he "is truly thankful to find the door of that solitary School-house, once more opened to receive the feet of those dear youthful members of the Church," and I believe the parents are equally well pleased, and even more so.

SPRYFIELD.

Miss Dudley has been appointed by the Society, to the above place, under the auspices and at the expense of the Ladies' Association also, and the School has been re-opened under favorable and promising prospects.

CONCLUSION.

Your Committee feel they cannot close this sketch of the proceedings of the Society, for the past year, in more fitting language than that of the Bishop of Meath in the annual sermon preached for the Society, in London, in the month of May last :

The need of such a Society is evinced by the cries of many of our colonial bishops—the best and most authoritative evidences—declaring the wants of the colonies and asking for assistance. The character of the Society is read in the Liturgy, and Homilies, and Articles of our Church, which are the standard of its faith and the guide of its practice; its labors in the grateful acknowledgments from every part of our colonial empire for even the modicum of aid which in the deep poverty of the Society it has been able to afford. It has been called into existence by a generally recognized destitution, depending on the joint benevolence of the clergy and the laity. It seeks to perform its selected duties in strict conformity with the ecclesiastical character of our Church and the regulated proprieties of its actings, and in due subordination to its discipline; and, by awakening and directing its energies, would prove the efficiency of that Church to meet the spiritual wants and necessities of all our people.
