DOING ONE'S BIT BY SAVING MONEY

Thrift Has Become a Personal as Well as a National Concern

(Montreal Merchant)

We have now had nearly a year of war and in the interval we have had occasion to change our view point on most things of our former thrifty respect to the individual's expenditure. We look our cue from Westminster at that kept up spending money. There is nothing as usual" was the slogan. To keep the empire busy was to provide the funds wherewith to supply the necessities of war. The imperial government desired this and the people loyally endeavored to spend as freely as prudence would allow. But now we are counseled to save our money. Even if some industries and some businesses must suffer, save what you can; that is the slogan today. Save your money for the empire may need it.

The demands of the situation are enormous. Fifteen million dollars a day must be provided by the people of the British Empire alone. Not the British government, but the British people must provide the money. The fight is a family affair, and we shall have to sacrifice the wealth we have been storing up all these years. There is nothing else to do. We cannot go out hunting moose, without wasting, as it were, some of the results of our former thrift; and we cannot go out shooting Germans without taking of the wealth we have laid by to provide the munitions and pay the other expenses of the undertaking. We shall have to do this at the rate of fifteen million dollars a day.

The British government will act as the assembling agency for all this wealth, and in the last analysis the people have to provide it out of their savings, or what can be borrowed, on the security of their savings, which in effect amounts to the same thing. The people cannot have money or its equivalent if they squander it in luxuries or things of fleeting value. But if they save it, or put it into some permanent form, it will be available when wanted and can be at the empire's service. That, then, is the reason for the present attitude.

This war is a destructive business. When fifteen million dollars is spent in firing off shells out of guns that themselves become worn out and need replacement, we are not doing work that is productive in a material sense. So it becomes our duty to conserve our resources. Whatever is wasteful, we should seek to eschew.

Unless we can secure compensation from Germany after the war is over (and how that is to be accomplished is hard to understand in view of the absolute impoverishment Germany must undergo) it is plain that the conservation of peace must usher in a vastly different condition from that to which we have been accustomed. It is impossible for the family to spend its resources and have its money still to spend, speaking nationally as well as individually. The war must then be followed by a period of repair and rehabilitation. The vast wealth we are now blowing out of existence in the trenches of Flanders, France, Gallipoli and the eastern front must be replaced before things can be as they were. And as wealth is built on wealth, it means that we shall have to begin almost at the beginning again.

Large spending power will be absent for many a long year, and it seems inevitable that as soon as the artificial activities of war have to be abandoned, there must ensue a period of great difficulty for those who have not thriftily prepared for it. So thrift becomes a personal as well as a national concern.

There is activity in many quarters now because the preparation of war materials is coming to be the chief business everywhere, but all this will cease as soon as peace is declared, and a new period of readjustment will ensue, when it may not be so easy to find sources of employment. For this reason there is another reason for thrift, namely, to provide against possible want.

The most serious thing we have to worry about from a business standpoint, is not how trade will be during the war, but how it will be after the war. Of course it is very hard to see very far into the future even under normal conditions, and how much more so under such unprecedented conditions as now exist. But one thing is clear, the war is to be much more destructive than thought at first, and such destruction must inevitably create conditions unprecedented in human history. When the war started, we expected it to be over in six months, or at least within a year, but now no one ventures a prophecy. When the war started, there was a possibility of doing business about as usual, but now the activities of the Empire must be directed to the new business of war and we must conserve every resource that will help us to carry it through successfully.

Tired, Aching Feet and Limbs are promptly relieved by applying Absorbine, Jr., the antiseptic liniment. It soothes, healing, and invigorating—puts vim and energy into jaded muscles. One of the many enthusiastic users writes: "I received the trial bottle of Absorbine, Jr., all right and at that time was unable to walk without a cane, just around the house. I used it freely and inside of two days could walk without limping, something I had not done in two months. I went to the drug store and procured a $1.00 bottle and today can walk as good as ever. It never let me down. I am recommending it to everyone I can, for I am a living witness.

Absorbine, Jr. should always be kept at hand for emergencies.

At druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or sent postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c in stamps.

MINISTER AND GIRL ARE DROWNED; ONE SAVED

Gloucester, July 21—Rev. Arthur Pingree of Norwood and one girl, while bathing at Wingate's Beach, West Gloucester, were drowned. They were brought to the beach by bystanders unconscious.

Pulmoners were taken to the scene by Mr. Pingree and the girl, Miss Helen Perkins, also of Norwood were dead.

Mr. Pingree was about thirty-five and was formerly pastor of Congregational Church, Pigeon Cove. He had come to the beach for a day. Mr. Pingree married a daughter of the late Moses Merrill, headmaster of the Boston Latin School. A third girl, Helen Masters, was saved. The girls were among a group of Norwood Campfire Girls who were camping at Pigeon Cove. One of the girls swam out beyond her depth and when Mr. Pingree and another went to their rescue. All were soon in distress. A boat was launched and their unconscious bodies were recovered.

CASHIER ADMITS HE TOOK ABOUT $30,000

Chicago, July 21—Max Palenske, cashier at the Drovers' National Bank, for whom detectives have been searching for several days, has surrendered himself and confessed to having embezzled approximately $30,000. Officials of the bank declared that the institution would lose nothing, as Palenske was under bond.

In St. Mary's church, Houlton, yesterday, Louis Dalton, formerly of this city, was united in marriage to Miss Kathleen O'Brien. They left on a honeymoon trip through upper Canada.
