This tale held good till his aunt, Miss C., arrived from England and gave gilmpses of his real history. His name was not Robbins but Horaca Rawlins, she said. He left England in GS94, and wrote regularly home to his friends until last summer, since which time all letters to him have been returned unopened.

Thus confronted, his true story was a puzzle to him, but later he admitted his real name and gave out a second extraordinary narrative to explain having taken the name of Robbins. He and Horace Robbins, he said, now graduated from McGill University, Montreal, in engineering, went to Manitoba, where both were lil. Robbins dying and leaving him his property. Then he assumed the name Robbins, and henceforth lived Robbins, life, with different adventures.
