

HOW GOTCH'S WIFE HELPS HIM TO WIN

Humboldt, Ia., Aug. 29.—It's the tasty, wholesome food, cooked by pretty little Mrs. Gotch's own little pink hands that is turning the champion wrestler's muscles into whipcords.

Frank is as big as a good sized mountain. Mrs. Frank is about as big as a ginger-jar, weight about 95 pounds. But she's got a love ribbon tied tightly about her good-natured husband's heart and she runs the Gotch household like a diminutive queen.

"What does Frank eat? What should men eat in order to be strong? How does Gotch live?"

A day at the Gotch home here tells the story. Little Mrs. Gotch is on the job bright and early when Frank gets out in the cool daylight for his cross-country run. She starts him off with a couple of soft boiled eggs and a bumper of sweet, rich milk and then begins on his breakfast.

He has more than a dozen, boiled eggs or a delicate parsley, omelette, light, fluffy and crisp brown on the exterior; hot baking powder biscuits or day-olds, home-baked whole wheat bread.

After breakfast Mrs. Gotch tucks her husband away in a room downy for a two hours' sleep. Then she does her mending and embroidering. At 1:30 she awakens him and he departs for the training camp to go through his hand-ball, wrist exercises and mat work.

Dinner usually consists of real soups (not the watery kind) another big steak or—more frequently—roast beef, roast veal, roast mutton, or roast lamb, with the vegetables that form the natural accompaniments to each.

Then comes a wholesome fruit or vegetable salad, with only a dash of seasoning, followed by a light cream dessert. Pies are tabooed, but rice puddings, bread puddings, cottage puddings, gelatin puddings, custards and fruit puddings make up for them.

No highly seasoned sauces go on Mrs. Gotch's table, but fruit sauces accompany every dinner. These with home-grown honey or dainty slices of bread or hot baking powder biscuits disappear down Frank Gotch's throat in large quantities.

Another side dish is cottage cheese, made from clapper from the Gotch herd. Tea and coffee are unknown, but quarts of hot milk are offered in cut glass and consumed readily by the smiling athlete.
