LUDLOW WAS ALMOST PUT AT WORK AGAIN

City's Dearest Treasure, However, Stubbornly Refused to Start Without Adding Another Little Expense.

There was a broad smile on the face of the aldermen who compose the board of works when it was casually announced yesterday that the Ludlow had broken down again. It will be remembered that while this modern triumph of naval architecture is the child of the board of works she was handed over in her earliest infancy to the ferry committee who adopted her as their very own. Since then her youthful escapades have been a source of continual trial to her foster parents. It is not too much to say that at each announcement of some eccentricity the members of the board of works sit tight and grin. They thank their stars at its first funeral.

The statement yesterday that another $500 would be needed for repairs was received with relief. The aldermen who also have a seat at the ferry committee's deliberations was said to have characterized the mirth as unbecomingly continued trial to her foster parents. It is not too much to say that at each announcement of some eccentricity the members of the board of works sit tight and grin. They thank their stars at its first funeral.
