christian philanthropists of the day bave united to sustain the movement by their influence. Whilst Roman Catholics Unitarians and Infidels desecrated by bands of music and drinking booths, the true philanthropists of Britain are seeking to secure for man a portion of the six days, in which he can find relaxation from labor, and seek for healthful recreation, without incurring the guilt of Sabbath-breaking. Quite recently a large meeting was held in Exeter Hall, at which Earl Shaftesbury, S. M Peto, and other leading Christian men of the metropolis advocated the Saturday half-holiday.

But this is not as general as it might, and, as we hope, will vet be. Were business, wherever practicable. to cease at two or three o'clock on Saturdays, the temptation to Sabbath-breaking would be lose by relinquishing a few hours to those in his caution. employ. Whatever work had to be done would enable the employed the better to attend to their daily duties. We commend the movement to the support of Christian philanthropists and trust the press will use its influence to extend this and every other movement which promises to benefit society.

Austria and Prussia. A lively interest has been lately awakened by the announcement, that the Prussian gov rument is making the necessary arrangements for convening a "General Synod o the Evangelical State Church." To us, who know nothing in our country of the union of church and state, it must appear exceedingly anomalous, that the most numerous Protestant church of the continent of Europe, could ever be reduced to so slavish a subjection to the state, as to remain entirely without a periodical assembly of its representatives. But, until within a few fears, be ecclesiastical affairs of the Protestants of Prussia were treated exactly as political matters, and ultimately decided by the state ministry, whose members, of course, at any lime, might be, and often were, atheists, or "Indifferentists." Things were mended a little by the establishment of the "Supreme Ecclesiastical Board" some years since, to which all the ecclesiastical affairs of the Prussian church are referred; thus taking them out of the ordinary run of political movements. This separate management of secure for them at least greater attention than they formerly received. But as the nomination of the members of this board belong exclusively to the king, he may, whenever he pleases, force upon the church an alism, and Romanizing tendencies, not rareare still in bloom; and it will not be difficult
